Franco Cuts 3 Vital Lines, Closes In On Barcelona

Insurgent Chieftain Escapes Death in Shellfire as He Flies Over Capital

French-Polish Alliance

Steel Ring Pierced

By the United Press.

Hendaye, French-Spanish Frontier, Jan. 20.—Spanish insurgent armies under Gen. Franco smashed through both north and south wings of the loyalist "ring of steel" protecting Barcelona tonight and then reported a climactic thrust through the center with the capture of the city of Igualada.

Within a few hours after an insurgent radio report Franco had narrowely escaped death in a burst of anti-aircraft shrapnel while on an inspection flight over the Barcelona suburbs, a swift series of official dispatches from both sides confirmed a day of triumphs for the insurgent armies that carried them to within 25 miles of the government capital.

The loyalists admitted loss of Calaf, northwest of Igualada and on the road to Manresa at the head of a valley that provides a clear sweep down to Barcelona.

Stronghold Circled

Then came an insurgent announcement Gen. Juan Yague's Moroccans had smashed through the southern flank and encircled Vendrell, the loyalist stronghold on the Mediterranean coast, which they later captured. The insurgeants occupied the village of San Jaime de Mones, 5 miles north of Vendrell, and then smashed down on the town of Arbos, where their rifle fire cut the highway leading from Vendrell to Barcelona.

The third and most stunning blow to the loyalists came with an official announcement by the insurgent military headquarters at Burgos that Igualada, in the center zone and on the highway, leading to Barcelona had been entered by insurgent troops after a long aerial and artillery bombardment.

Loyalist advices described fighting as the most severe of any day throughout the Franco offensive which started from the Segre river sector two days before Christmas and now has sliced off a huge three-cornered chunk of Catalonia.

Franco Escaped Death

This triangular area which Franco now controls is about 50 miles long at its base on the Mediterranean, representing the insurgent advance on the coast from Tortosa to Vendrell; about 80 miles on one side of the triangle running northward from Vendrell through Igualada and to Pons; and about 110 miles long on the third side which represents the lines along the Segre river prior to start of the offensive.

Today's insurgent advances were directed personally by Franco. The report Franco had risked his life—and almost lost it—on an aerial survey of the loyalist defenses and a daring flight over the suburbs of the government capital was picked up at border points from the radio broadcast at Burgos, the insurgent capital.

The radio broadcast asserted that the rebel generalissimo was in one plane of a squadron that surveyed the entire front on Wednesday and then toured over the Barcelona sector. At that point, the broadcast said, loyalist anti-aircraft guns opened up on the insurgent planes and shot down one ship in Franco's squadron.

The generalissimo's plane "narrowly escaped" being hit by the bursting shrapnel, the radio broadcast reported.

Refugee Parley Halted As Hitler Replaces Head of Reichsbank

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Jan. 20.—Adolf Hitler dropped his orthodox financial pilot, Hjalmar Schacht, from the presidency of the Reichsbank today and gave his post to Economics Minister Walther Funk to bring the powerful financial institution under full Nazi control.

Negotiations which George Rublee, American executive director of the International Jewish Refugee Committee, had been conducting with Schacht broke down quickly after the Reichsbank president's dismissal. Official notification was made the conversations would not be continued.

The startling dismissal was seen in informed quarters as a forerunner of five broad developments in German economy. These were:

Acceleration of credit inflation to finance Nazi rearmament and gigantic building programs under 48-year-old Funk, a long-time Nazi. Schacht, who is 61, opposed this course.

Crossing off of the United States as a possible source of raw materials for Germany.

(In Washington, Department of Commerce experts said the change from Schacht to Funk had no real bearing on German-American trade and predicted Germany would continue to buy certain necessities because the Balkans could not supply them.

Predict New Balkan Drive

(One high official nevertheless saw Funk's appointment as a slap at the United States. Officials who recently made a survey of the German situation said Funk was noted for his animosity toward the United States, in contrast to Schacht's friendliness.)

Intensification of Germany's economic drive through the Balkans toward the Near East and in South America.

Increased difficulties for American and other holders of German bonds in salvaging some of the money lent

Near-NudeNymphs Adorn 'Strip-Tease' Md. Road Bonds

Baltimore, Jan. 20 (AP).—Th "strip-tease" bond issue is the talk of the State roads commission today.

The expression was coined by employes startled by the appearance of two engraved female figures on the new bonds of the $711,000 construction fund issue clothed, barely, in a wisp of filmy veil.

Auditor William A. Codd, who in the past designed the vignettes, fully clothed from neck to ankle, said the vignettes are used on bonds because they are difficult to reproduce. He added the new ones might appear "a bit too frivolous" and cause the bonds to appear lacking in dignity.

Senate Gets Bill for D. C. Auditorium

Connally Sponsors $9,000,000 Project To Seat 20,000, Twice Rejected

A bill to provide the Capital with a $9,000,000 multiple-use auditorium with seating accommodations for nearly 20,000 was introduced by Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas, yesterday—exactly two years after he sat on the rain-soaked Capitol Plaza for the second inauguration of President Roosevelt.

Along with other legislative leaders, Senator Connally began to work for an auditorium large enough to hold inaugural day crowds immediately after that day. The first bill was introduced by the late Senator Joseph T. Robinson, with the Texan working in its behalf as chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings.

5-Man Board Planned

Yesterday's proposal duplicated the 1938 bill, which was introduced by Connally. It asked creation of a Capital Auditorium Commission to be composed of two House and two Senate members and a Department of Interior representative, who would co-operate closely with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, the Fine Arts Commission and the Procurement Division of the Treasury.

The structure would be located on the block fronting Constitution avenue, between John Marshall place and Third street, where the Municipal Center development now is under way and where land has been "earmarked" for an auditorium.

The design would be selected in "such an architectural competition as the Treasury might elect."

Might Hold 40,000

In addition to the main seating hall, the proposal is based on the idea that other rooms might be utilized and accommodations thus boosted to 40,000.

Concerts, operas, conventions, and sports events would be held there.

Secretary Ickes became an active booster of the auditorium movement several years ago, when 3,000 guests he had invited here to the World Power Conference were forced to dine in an improvised hall in Union Station.

D. C. Must Furnish Land

The Washington Board of Trade and almost every other trade and civic group in the District have agitated for larger auditorium facilities.

The Connally bill specifies that none of the proposed $9,000,000 be used for acquisition of land. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, while for a long time advocating an outlying site, declared:

"If the Federal Government is willing to provide the building, we will furnish the land. We have no idea of refusing the auditorium offer, even though I may not agree with the selected site."

King Snagged It in 1938

A possibility that the new auditorium might bear the name of Andrew Jackson was seen in the proposal of Representative Walter Chandler (Democrat), of Tennessee, that a memorial to the seventh President "take the form of some public building of a utilitarian nature."

The Connally bill struck a snag in the last Congress when Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, asked that it "go over" because he could not "figure out where the $9,000,000 is to come from." He declared he did not want more essential public construction held up by the auditorium project.

Until the Jefferson Memorial was definitely decided upon, there were numerous suggestions that the proposed building be the Thomas Jefferson Auditorium.

U. S. Can Build 10 Planes a Day, Monopoly Committee Is Told

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 20.—George R. MeyerCord said today airplane fuselages and wings can be turned out on a mass production basis by a hitherto secret method developed by American engineers.

He compared the manufacturing process, based on plastics, with the stamping of automobile bodies by giant presses.

George A. Baekland, vice president of the Beakelite Corporation, revealed existence of the process today before the Senate Monopoly Committee at Washington.

Meyercord, veteran head of the Haskelite Co., said he has successfully produced fuselages and wings for eight or ten planes which have been flown for more than a year.

Co-operating in the engineering work is V. E. Clark, of Hagerstown, Md., the Army's chief aeronautic engineer in the World War years.

Technical details were not revealed, but Meyercord said the process was based on moulding of thin veneers of wood into compound curvatures under heat.

"One plant of average floor space could turn out more fuselages than all the airplane manufacturers in the world," he declared. "Mass production of ten fuselages a day

Mother, 25, Ordered Jailed For Keeping Child, Is Hunted

Mrs. Newman, GAO Employe, Sought on Contempt Charge

United States marshals last night were searching for an attractive 23-year-old mother who was ordered jailed yesterday for refusal to surrender her 19-month-old daughter to her estranged husband.

The woman, Mrs. Harry Scott Newman, was found in contempt of court by Justice Jennings Bailey, of District Court, for failure to surrender the child, Joan Carol, to her husband, who was awarded custody of the baby by Justice Oscar R. Luhring November 23, 1938.

Last year Mrs. Newman, in suing for separate maintenance, lost custody of the girl. The maintenance suit is still in the courts.

Mrs. Newman, an employe at the General Accounting Office, was reported at her apartment as having "left the city." She lived in the Valley Vista apartments at Belmont road and Ashmead place northwest. A well-known Washington sportswoman, the former Evelyn Marie Wilson, she was married to Newman in October, 1934.

Newman's attorney, Jean Boardman, yesterday told the court it was believed that Mrs. Newman had sent the baby to the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Harris Wilson, in Chester, Pa.

Justice Bailey had ordered Mrs. Newman to appear in court yesterday and show cause why she should not be held in contempt. When she failed to appear, the justice issued the order directing that she be arrested and jailed until she surrenders the daughter, or until the court orders different action.

MRS. HARRY S. NEWMAN

Newman, a graduate of Georgetown University, employed at the Congressional Library, was reported "out of town for the week."

He has lived with his parents at 2804 Twenty-seventh street northwest since he and his wife parted.

Last Friday Boardman told the court that Mrs. Newman had slapped her husband outside the court and told him: "I don't care about any court order. You'll never get my baby. I'll see to that."

Japan Bids Aid to Develop Asia; Its Bond Sale Halted in Hawaii

SEC Gets Injunction to Bar Issue; Money To Be Returned

The Securities and Exchange Commission announced last night that it had halted sale in Hawaii of Japanese bonds issued to help finance conquest of China.

The commission revealed it had obtained an injunction from Judge Metzerer in the Federal District Court of Hawaii restraining the Doshika Kai, a Japanese patriotic society, from unlawfully soliciting subscriptions in the Territory of Hawaii to a 1,000,000 yen issue of Japanese emergency bonds.

Basis for the SEC's action was the society's failure to register with the commission the bonds, which also are known as "Chinese incident bonds."

The injunction was consented to by the Doshika Kai Society and by its principal officers, who were among 30 defendants, the commission said.

In addition the SEC revealed, the defendants signed a stipulation agreeing to return all funds received thus far and to cancel all subscriptions for the bonds in Hawaii.

The commission's complaint charged that the Japanese government publicly was offering an issue of emergency bonds and that the Doshika Kai, its officers and agents were soliciting subscriptions through the mail without previous registration with the SEC and in violation of the 1933 securities act.

Arita Warns France And Russia Not To Help China

By the United Press.

Tokyo (Saturday), Jan. 21.— Foreign Minister Arita at the opening of Parliament today invited the United States, Britain and other powers to participate in an impending era of prosperity in East Asia on condition they recognize Japan's dominant position in this part of the world.

Simultaneously the foreign minister warned France and Soviet Russia they must cease aiding China or risk Japanese retaliation.

[The Post's special correspondent said that Baron Hiranuma, Japan's new premier, declared in his opening speech that "the final aim of our present campaign in China does not lie simply in a military victory, but in the rebirth of China and the creation of a new order uniting Japan, Manchukuo and China in a relationship of mutual aid and colaboration"

[Baron Hiranuma declared his government would concentrate on carrying out the "immutable policy" in China for which imperial sanction was obtained by the cabinet of former Premier Fuminaro Konoye, aiming at "the foundation of East Asia's prosperity and progress in the co-operation, political,

2 Maryland U. Coeds Vanish In Exam Week

University of Maryland officials last night were investigating the mysterious disappearance of two attractive coeds on the first day of examination week, as police in Washington and nearby States began an intensive search.

The coeds, missing since Wednesday, are Joy Lucille Heaster, of Salisbury, Md., and Jean Beatrice Matheke, of Newark, N. J. Both are 19 and roommates at the Margaret Brent Dormitory at College Park.

Records at the dormitory show the girls, both premedical students, left word they were leaving for their homes. It was learned that the girls took a bus to Washington, and at the depot, an attendant recalled, they asked their baggage be sent to Union Station.

Dr. Otto G. Haheke, Newark physician, said his daughter had a checking account of her own and often made trips to Washington.

Diplomat Accused In Refugee Graft

La Paz, Bolivia, Jan. 20 (AP).—The foreign ministry today said the Bolivian consul general in Prague had been "suspended by cable" pending investigation of charges he and others were receiving money from Jews who hoped to emigrate from Czecho-Slovakia.

It said a special tribunal would be set up to try cases of alleged graft in connection with Jewish immigration.

Justice Forbids Thanking Jury For Acquittal

There will be no more thanks for the jurors who acquit defendants tried before Justice Proctor in District Court.

"I do not believe," he said yesterday, "the jury appreciates any thanks for the dispensation of justice. I am sure I do not. And as far as this court is concerned this practice will hereafter cease. The jury does not acquit a man as a favor to him but because they believe it their duty."

2 Canal Zone Spies Get 2-Year Terms

Cristobal, C. Z., Jan. 20 (AP).—Two young Germans, convicted in the Canal Zone's first espionage trials of unlawfully obtaining information on the defenses of the United States, were sentenced today to two years at hard labor.

The two were Hans Heinrich Schackow, 28, and Ernst Robert Edward Kuhrig, 29.

U. S. Again to Buy Surplus Butter

By the Associated Press.

The association has been authorized to buy 115,000,000 pounds of surplus butter to bolster the market.

Roosevelt Would Tax D. C. More

He Asserts 'Human Needs' Necessitate Further Levies; Reactions Varied

Expressing the belief that "human needs" were receiving inadequate consideration in the District, President Roosevelt declared yesterday Washingtonians should pay more taxes and more money should be spent for local governmental obligations.

He mentioned lack of hospital and health facilities and said his study of a Treasury report on Washington taxes had shown him that District residents pay less taxes than they would have to pay in other cities of similar size.

While stressing the tax-increase angle, the President suggested that the problem might entail a consideration of the share which the Federal Government gives toward the District's upkeep.

Reactions Vary

He made it plain that he had given the local situation considerable thought and is planning to devote considerable energy to an attempted solution to several problems as he sees them.

He intimated he had District finances in mind when he created the Federal Real Estate Board by executive order a few days ago. The board will make a study to determine the extent to which communities are affected adversely by the loss of revenue on tax-exempt Federal property.

Reactions varying from elated approval to stinging criticism of his suggestion that not enough money is being spent locally greeted the President's statements, which were made at his morning press conference.

King Not Disturbed

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, although emphasizing he was not "answering" the President, declared: "I think the $50,000,000 the District got last year was a liberal amount. It was more than some of the States had. I see nothing perilous in the present situation."

While approving heartily the interest of President Roosevelt in the District and agreeing "completely" with him on the matter of pressing local needs, Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, expressed doubt that Washington taxes were out of line with those paid in other cities.

"I think the increase should come in the Federal contribution. The District has not been treated fairly in that respect," he declared.

Cites Report

The President intimated at his press conference that the increased Federal contribution might be needed in addition to local tax increases. He compared taxes here with cities of similar size, basing his beliefs on a report made a few years ago by the Treasury Department, and said Washington was at the bottom of the list.

Melvin C. Hazen, chairman of the District Commissioners, declared he was "100 per cent for an increase in the Federal appropriation," and praised the Chief Executive for his local interest.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, District Health Officer, said he recently had submitted a "more adequate" health plan to the Commissioners, who had asked what should be done at Gallinger Hospital—

Subcommittee Votes for Delay In WPA Cut

Adams Hints House 150 Million Slash Will Be Restored; Purge of Lists Urged

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate Appropriations subcommittee yesterday sustained the $150,000,000 House cut in WPA relief funds with a compromise proviso against "turning workers out in the cold" in February and March.

Drawn to meet Administration protests against sharp slashes in relief rolls in midwinter, the substitute prohibits reduction of more than 5 per cent in the WPA load of 3,000,000 in the next two months.

Beginning in April, with anticipated agricultural and business demands for labor, the rolls would be rapidly reduced at WPA discretion. If an emergency should develop requiring more funds, the President would be asked to state the facts to Congress, along with the estimated deficiency.

Despite heavy pressure for restoration of the $875,000,000 asked by the President, the "compromise" won the 8 to 3 support of the subcommittee. Only Senators McKellar of Tennessee, Hayden of Arizona and (by proxy) Overton of Louisiana, all Democrats, voted against it.

Full Committee Acts Today

The amended bill goes before the full Senate Appropriations Committee this morning. Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, sub-committee chairman, forecast full committee approval, but with a narrower margin of support.

"But we will probably get the whey beat out of us on the Senate floor, as usually happens when the sub-committee makes an honest effort to economize," Adams added wrily.

The Senate bill affirmed the House ban on Civil Service coverage for WPA administrative workers and tightened the provision so no worker drawing pay from relief funds, whether in WPA or any other Federal bureau, can accept civil service status under the President's general order effective next month. Some 33,000 administrative workers and WPA field staff employes will be affected.

Urges Purge of Rolls

The bill orders an immediate investigation of WPA rolls by that agency, with a view to "purging" from the rolls those not actually in need of relief.

Other provisions of the sub-committee bill:

Continue the so-called Woodrum amendment, requiring apportionment of the funds to last the full five months, from February to June 30.

Approve three stringent provisions against political use of relief funds, proposed by Senator Hatch (Democrat), New Mexico.

Impose a 25 per cent limitation on WPA differentials in pay for the same class of work, revising

Norris Blames Congress for Relief Politics

Hopkins 'Nightmare' Caused by Refusal To Legislate, He Says

The part played by President Roosevelt in last year's Maryland primaries was bitterly denounced by Senator Tydings yesterday in an angry Senate debate that held up confirmation of Harry L. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce until Monday.

The Maryland Senator delivered a scathing attack on the President, but said he would vote for Hopkins as the former WPA administrator "did no more than was expected of him."

Norris Blames Congress

In the first full-length defense of Hopkins that the Senate had heard since opening of debate Thursday, the veteran liberal Independent, Senator Norris, Nebraska, accused Congress itself of whatever politics had entered into administration of relief.

He charged that by refusing to legislate against political activities in WPA and other new Governmental agencies, Congress was responsible for perversion of relief funds. Norris added that "one of the things almost a nightmare to Hopkins" was the fact that politicians all over the country continually made demands upon him that were "extremely difficult to resist."

In saying he would vote for Hopkins, Tydings followed the example of Senator Gillette, of Iowa, another target of the Administration's unsuccessful primary "purge" of last year, who had announced on the Senate floor earlier in the day that he favored confirmation despite the fact that "one of the last men

3d Corps Games Set for August At Manassas

All military forces of the Middle Atlantic area will concentrate in northern Virginia in August for the most extensive maneuvers, it was learned yesterday.

Twenty-two thousand officers and men of the Army, National Guard and Reserves of the Third Corps Area, comprising the District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, will hold war games in the first two weeks of August, officials said, probably at Manassas, Va.

Plans originally called for moving all of the 2,000 troops to Pine Camp, N. Y., for even larger maneuvers with the First and Second Corps Areas, but funds were not allowed in the War Department budget. Maj. Gen. James K. Parsons, Third Corps Area commander, will be in charge.

Ex-Chorus Girl and 2 Nieces Share Col. Ruppert's Millions

Helen Weyant, Once On N. Y. Stage, Voices 'Surprise' at Bequest

By the United Press.

New York, Jan. 20.—Two nieces and a former musical comedy actress who was "so surprised" were revealed today as the principal beneficiaries of Col. Jacob Ruppert's will and are expected to receive several million dollars.

The former actress is Helen Winthrop Weyant, known on the stage as Winthrope Wayne, long a friend of the bachelor brewer and owner of the New York Yankees. The nieces are Mrs. Joseph Holleran and Mrs. J. Basil Maguire, both of Greenwich, Conn. They are the daughters of his sister, Mrs. H. Garrison Silleck, jr.

Only two other minor bequests were made. The rest, including the Yankees baseball team, the Ruppert brewery and his real estate properties, went to the three women. No accurate estimate of the estate's value was available, but it has been valued at between $30,000,000 and $70,000,000.

"I am so surprised," Miss Weyant said, when told of the will's contents. "I had not the slightest idea why he should give me all that money."

Brazil Favors Cotton Price Conference

U. S. Sounding Out Other Nations; Japan And Manchukuo Cool

By the Associated Press.

The United States already has sounded out Brazil, it was learned yesterday, on a proposal for an international conference to deal with the problem of low cotton prices.

The Agriculture Department's attache at Buenos Aires, Paul O. Nyhus, discused the proposal with representatives of the Brazilian government at the recent Pan-American conference at Lima, Peru, authoritative sources said.

Brazilian representatives were said to have expressed willingness to participate. Brazil, while a minor producer of cotton, has expanded sharply in recent years.

President Backs Wallace

President Roosevelt joined Secretary of Agriculture Wallace yesterday in expressing desire for cooperative international effort to improve prices. He told a press conference he believed an international meeting would be a very good thing.

It was also learned that the conference suggestion has been discussed informally with Egypt and India, major competitors of American world cotton markets. The Egyptian reception was said to have been favorable, while India was cool.

Farm officials said there was little hope at this time for co-operation with Manchuria and Japanese-controlled China. They expressed the opinion this Government would await outcome of an international wheat conference expected to be held this spring, before formally proposing a cotton meeting.

On Capitol Hill, Chairman Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said the Administration suggestion for an international conference on cotton was "an outrageous proposal to consider seriously." America, he declared, produces the world's best cotton, and those "who contemplate this conference seem to take it for granted that the only consideration is the quantity of cotton the world needs."

Study Domestic Problem

Meanwhile, the domestic cotton problem continued to receive attention of Agriculture Department officials and Congressmen. They studied reports that buyers of American cotton were having difficulties in obtaining sufficient supplies of the better grades because 10,900,000 bales are tied up under Government loans.

Marketing authorities said a large percentage of available cotton was of the lower grades, which are not eligible for Government loans.

Relief Reduction Foe Uses Strong Language in Demanding Appropriation Boost

By the Associated Press.

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee, received this telegram among 5,000 other protests against reducing the relief appropriation:

Mystified by "delete," his secretary called the telegraph company.

The U. S. Maritime Commission reported to Congress that by April 1, it will have facilities available for training 3,000 unlicensed and 300 licensed men for the Merchant Marine. The report was filed after Congress asked it to map a comprehensive system of training personnel for the Merchant Marine.

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, warned senators sponsoring a new Federal anti-lynching bill that he and other southerners will lead a filibuster if it comes to the floor. Southern senators blocked a similar bill last year.

Chairman Sumners (Democrat), of the House Judiciary Committee, introduced a bill to create an administrative office for Federal courts to handle the business end of the judiciary system which now is exercised through the Department of Justice.

Representative Stearns (Republican), of New Hampshire, introduced a bill to authorize $60,000,000 for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase and sell timber felled by the New England hurricane.

Chairman Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, of the House Labor Committee, announced introduction of a bill making the Civilian Conservation Corps into a permanent agency as urged by President Roosevelt.

The recently rejuvenated House Republican minority bloc completed assignments of new members to standing committees. Major assignments had been made before yesterday's caucus.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Edmiston (Democrat), West Virginia, said after a White House conference President Roosevelt had expressed "deep interest" in a proposal to store 100,000,000 tons of coal as a war-time emergency supply.

Edmiston said the President recalled coal transportation difficulties he encountered as Assistant Secretary of the Navy in 1917 when railroads were unable to supply sufficient cars to keep coal moving to industrial centers.

By the Associated Press.

The economy campaign in the House got by another hurdle yesterday when members refused to increase an item in the first deficiency appropriation bill for repairing damage to State and private forests struck by the hurricane in New England last September.

The House turned down an amendment by Representative McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, to boost the fund from $3,000,000 recommended by the Appropriations committee to the $5,000,000 proposed by the President and the Budget Bureau.

A little later the House rejected an amendment by Representative O'Connor (Democrat), Montana, to raise from $2,000,000 to $3,300,000 the amount carried in the bill to destroy grasshoppers, crickets and other insect pests.

and "clarifying" a similar House provision.

Deny WPA relief to workers who refuse other bona fide offers of employment under reasonable working conditions and at prevailing rates of pay.

Struck Out Alien Clause

The sub-committee struck from the bill the House prohibition against WPA aid for aliens, because of administrative difficulties. Substituted in its place were provisions of the present relief law, giving WPA preference first to veterans, next to citizens and then to foreigners who have taken out first naturalization papers.

Conflicting House provisions against politics in relief were eliminated and the Hatch amendments approved instead. Also stricken from the bill was the House restriction against WPA removal from the rolls of persons over 65 and women with dependents who are eligible for social security benefits. A House ban on relief funds for hosiery mills in competition with private industry was also dropped.

Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the full committee and advocate of a much deeper slash in WPA funds, left the room wreathed in smiles, but complaining he was "the only member of the committee in favor of economy."

"I voted by myself all the time," said Virginia's rebel, who had proposed an appropriation of only $600,000,000. Glass said he did not offer his amendment, because he saw "it was useless to do it."

Adams Withdraws Motion

The sub-committee "compromise" was worked out almost entirely by Senator Byrne (Democrat), of South Carolina, chairman of the Senate's special unemployment committee, in co-operation with Senator Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, who is not a committee member. Harrison suggested the plan Thursday.

As the 11-member group met, Senator Adams first proposed another compromise which had gained wide support—appropriation of only sufficient funds to carry WPA rolls at full tide through February and March. Adams withdrew his own proposal after Byrnes argued for the $725,000,000 substitute.

Besides Byrnes and Adams, the eight Senators voting for the sub-committee plan were Glass, Tydings, of Maryland, and Russell, of Georgia (Democrats), and Hale, of Maine; Townsend, of Delaware, and Nye, of North Dakota (Republicans).

Senator McKellar, Administration wheelhorse on the committee, offered the President's $875,000,000 figure, but it lost on a voice vote.

Following the day-long session, both Adams and Byrnes received reporters and explained the committee action.

"The purpose is to avoid any cut during this winter period," Adams said. "Our hope is that after March there will be a reduction in demands for relief that will render the $725,000,000 sufficient for the entire five months."

The Coloradoan pointed out that in the same five-month period in 1938, WPA rolls were reduced from 3,035,000 to 2,249,000. In 1937, for the same period, rolls dropped from 2,145,000 to 1,568,000. Adams said the President's $875,000,000 estimate allowed only for a reduction of 300,000 this year.

Here Byrnes took up the thread to say that in January, 1938, when many automobile and textile plants were closed, there were only 1,900,000 on WPA. He said the sub-committee bill provides enough money for the same 1,900,000 total on the rolls in June.

"In other words," said the South Carolinian, "under this appropriation, you will have as many cared for in the dead of next summer as you actually had on relief in the dead of winter last year.

Believes There Will Be Jobs

"The rolls can be kept at 3,000,000 in February and March. But in April, we think some should be put off to meet demands for farm help and to take jobs opening in the building trades and elsewhere. After 12 months of recovery, there is every reason to believe there will be such jobs."

Then Byrnes explained the "emergency" proviso, under which President Roosevelt can ask for more relief funds, providing he submits a statement to Congress giving the "facts constituting such emergency."

"We haven't said this is the last nickel that will be appropriated," Adams said. "More can be provided if an emergency is shown. But some of these PWA contracts ought to be under way by that time."

The bill's provision for a WPA investigation of its own rolls, and elimination of those not in actual need of relief, was in line with a recommendation first made by Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, in the House. Woodrum said 10 per cent of those on relief were "professional reliefers" who have been on the rolls since WPA started. Byrnes said the Senate subcommittee was particularly influenced by testimony that 21 per cent of persons on WPA in New York state have been there from the start. He said that fact alone did not mean they were not legally entitled to relief, but he thought it warranted investigation.

The three Hatch amendments barring political use of relief funds are closely in line with recommendations of the Sheppard committee and the Senate unemployment committee.

Lewis Urges Increase in U.S. Aid to District

Supplementary Report Suggests Footing 60% Of Local Relief Costs

Solution of the District relief problem, Burdette G. Lewis, District relief investigator, said yesterday, depends in large degree on working out a plan whereby the Federal Government will pay its "proper" share of the expense of local government.

Lewis recommended an outlay of $2,508,399 from District revenues to supplement Federal funds in meeting relief needs during the next fiscal year. Lewis pointed out that Washington's relief bill is running at the rate of nearly $10,000,000 annually.

Urges 60-40 Cost Ratio

He recommended, in the supplement to his report, that persons on the local WPA waiting list be cared for under a plan whereby the Federal Government would pay 60 per cent and the District government 40 per cent of the expense.

The amount needed, Lewis said, will be $1,576,596 within a period of five months.

Concerning the question of proper apportionment of the cost of the District government, Lewis said:

"The matter has become acute, especially in view of the great influx of strangers into Washington.

Asks Immediate Action

"In fact, with 50,000 unemployed and the District enjoying a boom, it is not hard to see that the relief problem is not to be settled here by awaiting a return of prosperity."

The $2,508,399 which he recommends is 48 per cent higher than the $1,696,250 in the President's budget message to Congress. The latter figure, however, contains the tentative $900,000 estimate for direct relief. The final request of District officials for this purpose is being held in abeyance pending study of the Lewis report.

A large part of the increase recommended by Lewis is for salaries of new workers to be employed in his proposed consolidated Department of Employment and Social Security.

Although salaries would be boosted from $212,785 to $331,585, the new department would have to handle the whole relief problem here, both District and Federal, he said.

Oklahoma Softens State Rights Stand On Dam Project

By the United Press.

Oklahoma City, Jan. 20.—The Oklahoma State Senate, fearing reprisals from the Federal Government, passed a new resolution today softening the tenor of its demand yesterday for a halt in construction of the Government's $54,000,000 Red River dam project.

The substitute resolution, its author said, was "to advise Congress that the State concurred in the Government's flood control policy and wanted no appropriations halted except those affecting the Red River dam."

The Oklahoma Congressional delegation in Washington warned representatives of Gov. Leon Phillips of Oklahoma that "we are on dangerous ground here" if Oklahoma insists on making the Federal control measure a State's rights issue.

League Asks Parley On Aid for China

Geneva, Jan. 20 (AP).—The League of Nations Council today invited League members to consult with "similarly interested powers" on measures to aid China against Japan, "should this appear appropriate."

With Peru and Boliva abstaining, it condemned bombardments of civilian populations, praising the Spanish government's pledge not to send planes to retaliate for such bombardments.

Roosevelt Approves Fund For Guam Base

Holds $5,000,000 for 'Improvements' Does Not Mean Fortification

President Roosevelt said yesterday he approved authorization of a $5,000,000 fund to improve naval bases at the Pacific Island of Guam, as proposed in the $65,000,000 naval base program, but reserved decision as to the advisability of carrying out the Navy Department's program for fortifying a chain of islands extending north to Alaska.

The proposed dredging of Guam Harbor, construction of a breakwater and building of hangars, shops and barracks, the President argued, did not come under the head of fortification. The question of fortification, he said, belonged to the Navy's long range program, about which at this time he was not bothering his head.

Rejects Policy "Lever"

The President rejected the suggestion that the Guam proposal might be made the basis for negotiations with Japan concerning policy in the Far East.

Nevertheless, he let stand the implication that future action would depend on the trend of international developments.

Other developments in the national defense situation were:

1. Army staff officers informed the House Military Affairs Committee that the peace-time garrison of 13,000 in the Panama Canal Zone should be doubled.

2. Representative J. Parnell Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, urged that all ships passing through the canal be inspected as to their contents to prevent sabotage.

3. House Republicans authorized Representative Joseph W. Martin, of Massachusetts, to name a committee of 11 to study all phases of national defense and recommend a policy to the House Republican conference.

4. Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, announced he would introduce legislation to combine the Army and Navy in a department of defense to be headed by a secretary, with undersecretaries in charge of each of the two subordinate arms of defense.

Annexations Proposed

Chairman Summers, of the House Judiciary Committee, yesterday introduced an Administration bill to extend the jurisdiction of the United States over 11 tiny Pacific islands, the ownership of several of which is disputed.

Under the measure, the authority of the United States District Court at Hawaii would cover Midway, Wake, Johnston, Kure, Baker, Howland, Jarvis, Canton and Enderbury islands, and Kingman Reef.

Republicans Check Plan for Big Census Building in D. C.

A concerted attack on the $3,500,000 census building, proposed in the first deficiency appropriations bill, enabled Republicans yesterday to disrupt Democratic plans and chalk up their "biggest House victory" of the session.

Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, charged the Administration has overspent by $76,000,000 the $50,000,000 authorized for Federal buildings in the District.

Representative Clifton A. Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, after hastily conferring with Speaker Bankhead, got the question put off until Monday.

Various Congressmen argued that there "is no earthly need why some other city shouldn't have the building," which is to be used in the 1940 census.

D. C. to Study Charity Solicitation

A public hearing on legislation to curb unethical organizations soliciting funds will be held in February, the District Commissioners announced yesterday.

Commissioner Hazen said he would favor a commission to supervise all collections made by welfare and religious organizations, and the bonding of solicitors.

Invention Alters Light's Hues And Brightens Chemist's Illness

William J. Whiting, discoverer of a trick to make things appear colors they aren't, arranges "chorines" on the miniature stage he uses for demonstrations

Creator, Sick 13 Years, Has 2 Reasons to Be Happy—He's Recovering From Strange Malady, and for First Time Sees Idea in Action

William J. Whiting was happy yesterday for two reasons—he had seen for the first time a commercial application of his stage lighting invention, and he was healthier than he had been in 13 years.

The plot may sound familiar. Whiting was a chemist engaged in experimental work for the United States Navy. Contact with dyes caused a strange illness, which has kept him hospitalized most of the time.

But during the years of experiment he came upon a discovery—he could make light do tricks by casting it through varicolored sheets of gelatine.

Yesterday he watched the costumes of the chorines on the Earle stage change from red, to blue, to green and brilliant yellow while their hands and legs and faces remained unchanged—and it was done with his method.

Whiting Filterlite went on the market more than a year ago. It has been used on two of the big New York stages, on electric signboards, and in interior decoration. But it was only yesterday that its inventor was well enough to watch its success.

Whiting has been approached by a representative of a foreign nation seeking to know if the method could be used in spotting enemy planes during a war. Whiting says it could, "but Uncle Sam will get first crack at it."

The method is simple enough. Certain filters block out certain rays of light. Only that light that passes through is reflected by an object. If the object is purple and red light is blocked by the filter it will show up blue, since red and blue make purple. The process can be carried to almost infinite complexity.

New uses for filterlite which are being developed are in motion pictures, streoscopic (three dimensional) pictures, the elimination of glare in automobile headlights, matching of colored materials, candling eggs, spotting decay in meat, and in microscopic study of germs.

Brooklyn Fire Takes 3 Lives

New York, Jan. 20 (AP).—A fire which took three lives and badly damaged a four-story house in the aristocratic hill section of Brooklyn was said today by Chief Fire Marshal Thomas Brophy to have been accidental in origin.

Earlier, Arthur Clement, a retired maritime lawyer, and the only survivor, had said he believed the fire might have been set by a prowler.

The victims were Mrs. Amelia Clement, 90, widow of State Supreme Court Justice Nathaniel H. Clement; her son, George, 54, and George Clement's wife, Grace, 51.

Congressmen Join to Equalize Freight Rates

Southerners Obtain Western Aid to End Differentials

By the Associated Press.

Members of Congress from the South and West formed a bloc yesterday to force down territorial differentials in railroad freight rates.

Sixty House members representing 20 States agreed to back legislation for national equality in rail charges.

They elected Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman; Representative Terry (Democrat), of Arkansas, vice chairman, and Representative McLaughlin (Democrat), of Nebraska, secretary.

To Ask I. C. C. Unit Hearing

Ramspeck and other Southerners called for Western help, declaring the Northeast received preferential rail treatment at expense of every other section. Westerners were told their States suffered even more severe discrimination than that against the South.

The conference agreed to request a hearing before the House Inter-State Commerce Committee, despite an assertion from Representative Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, this procedure would serve only to "bury" the program.

The Mississippian proposed a movement to block the Administration's general railroad legislation unless it included a provision guaranteeing sectional equality in freight rates.

To Confer on Terms

He withdrew this resolution, however, after several Representatives expressed unwillingness to bind themselves at the outset to oppose any other legislation.

Ramspeck, Terry, McLaughlin and a 15-member executive committee were instructed to confer on terms of the freight reduction program and to report to another meeting of the West-South group next Friday.

Goldsborough Gets District Judgeship

President's Appointment Seen as Reward for Md. 'Purge' Campaign

By Edward T. Folliard

President Roosevelt yesterday nominated Representative T. Alan Goldsborough (Democrat), of Maryland, to be an associate justice of the District Court, a $10,000-a-year, lifetime post.

Conservative Maryland Democrats regarded the appointment as a reward for Goldsborough's part in the "purge" campaign against Senator Millard E. Tydings last summer. It was Goldsborough who invited President Roosevelt to Denton, on the Eastern Shore, so that he could make a speech urging support of Tydings' New Deal rival in the primary, former Representative David J. Lewis.

Though Goldsborough always had been looked upon as a power on the Eastern Shore, voters on the peninsula, angry at what was called the Roosevelt "invasion," overwhelmingly supported Tydings.

There was considerable speculation yesterday as to what Senator Tydings might do when Goldsborough's nomination comes up for confirmation in the Senate. The Post learned on good authority that Tydings will not bother to challenge it.

The last Congress authorized three additional judgeships for the District Court. One of these was filled by the appointment of Bolitha J. Laws, former president of the District Bar Association. Now, with the nomination of Goldsborough, one vacancy in that court remains.

Judgeship added

The last Congress also authorized an additional judgeship for the District Court of Appeals, a $12,500-a-year post.

Members of the District of Columbia Bar Association have long urged the appointment of local men to vacancies in the local courts, but they have been little heeded. Justice Laws is the only Washington man who has won an important judicial post here in recent years. Former Representative Fred M. Vinson, of Kentucky, was the last appointee to the District Court of Appeals.

Jerome Frank, a prominent figure in the New Deal inner council, now a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, was at one time mentioned for the existing vacancy on the court of appeals, but such talk has subsided lately.

Brien McMahon, assistant to the Attorney General, was boomed for a place on the District court. The other day, however, Attorney General Frank Murphy designated McMahon to arrange for a conference of United States attorneys here in April, indicating that he expected him to stay on at the Department of Justice.

Representative Marvin Jones (Democrat), of Texas, is said by his colleagues to be certain to get a judicial appointment here, either to the District court or the District court of appeals.

Representative Goldsborough, tall, baldish and 61, is now serving his tenth term in the House, having first been elected in 1920. Scion of a prominent Maryland family that traces ancestry to colonial days, he was born in Greensboro, Md., September 16, 1877.

Washington College Alumnus

He was graduated from Washington College at Chestertown, Md., in 1899 and from the University of Maryland Law School in 1901. Hanging out his shingle in Denton, Caroline County, he practiced law for three years, and then was elected State's attorney for the county. Four years later he was elected to the House.

He married Laura Collins Hall, of Milford, Del., in 1901. They have four children, Mrs. Heath D. Goldsborough, of Baltimore; Mrs. Clarence Gough, and T. Alan Goldsborough, jr., of this city, and George H. Goldsborough, a senior at Cornell University.

Representative Goldsborough was a baseball and tennis player in his college days. He also was something of a swimmer. His principal recreation now is hiking.

Yesterday, he said he would make no plans for leaving his House seat until he has been confirmed by the Senate for the judgeship. Eastern Shore Democrats, however, already have begun maneuvering for his seat.

Six men are mentioned as possible successors: State Senator David J. Ward, who has been indorsed by the Wicomico County Democratic State Central Committee; William S. Gordy, of Salisbury; State Senator Thomas E. Johnson, of Worcester County; State Senator Dudley G. Roe, of Queen Annes County; State Senator Earl Bennett, of Dorchester County; former State Senator Olin R. Higgins, of Dorchester County.

Gov. O'Conor will be required to call a special election to fill the vacancy.

could be started in two weeks or a month."

Lighter Than Metal

The moulded fuselages and wings were described as being waterproof and much lighter than metal of the same strength.

The process is fast enough, he said, so that one die can produce 20 fuselages a day. Each fuselage or wing is made in two parts.

Baekland told the Senate committee that the labor of only nine men is needed in the mass production process.

Meyercord gave major credit to Col. Clark, who designed Air Corps planes but resigned from the Army a few years ago and now heads his own company.

By the United Press.

George A. Baekland, vice president told the Senate Monopoly Committee yesterday that speedy mass production of airplanes through use of plastic materials "is an established fact."

He said that an airplane wing or fuselage can be turned out in two hours and by elimination of rivets, speed of planes can be increased 35 miles per hour.

He said the new construction method should prove "20 or 30 times" faster than current means, and would meet the Administration's defense program of mass airplane production "admirably." He added that he had full permission of the Army and Navy in making public his disclosure.

$10-a-Month Raise Urged for District WPA Workers

Edgar G. Brown, head of the United Government Employes, advocated a $10 monthly increase for all WPA workers in the District at a mass meeting of the organization last night in Garnet-Paterson auditorium.

The organization voted to ask that the District be put on the same basis as New York and other large metropolitan areas, "since the cost of living in Washington, according to a WPA survey, is higher than in any other city in the United States."

The organization favored making sewing, household aid, household service training, and adult education projects the last to be disturbed in any reorganization of WPA.

Ex-Chorus Girl Left Millions By Ruppert

explained that "Col. Ruppert was a close friend of the family and an old friend of my father.

"I have known him since I was a little girl, as long as I can remember," she said of the 71-year-old baseball magnate.

"He never said a word about leaving me anything and I was completely surprised when they called me over for the reading of the will.

"There is no tie and no bond.

"Maybe he regarded me as a daughter, as they say now, but if he did, I didn't know about it. He was just a nice old friend."

Miss Weyant, who has appeared in the choruses of "The Merry Malones" and "Three Cheers," said she was "through" with the theater.

She was asked what she planned to do "with all that money," and answered:

"Good, I hope."

Miss Weyant is the sister of Rex Weyant, traveling secretary of the Yankees team.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art was left such of the colonel's art objects as it may desire, and $150,000 was bequeathed to Lenox Hill Hospital.

There were no other heirs, but it was provided the heirs of the three women may inherit in turn.

Mrs. Weyant, the daughter of the late George W. Weyant, was born in Springfield, Mass., and came to New York to seek a stage career. She met Col. Ruppert, probably through her parents and they became excellent friends. She used his automobile frequently, it was said, and often was a visitor at his country place in Garrison, where she sometimes served as hostess at small parties.

She receives $300,000 outright and the rest of the estate goes into trusts to be divided equally among the two nieces and Miss Weyant.

H. Garrison Silleck, 3d, nephew of Col. Ruppert, said he "hardly knew" Miss Weyant.

"All I know is that she was a very good friend of Mr. Ruppert's for a great many years," he said.

Mrs. Maguire described Miss Weyant as "a very charming person."

Labor Leader Tells How He Was Kidnaped

Murray Humphreys Collected $50,000 Ransom, Man, 90, Says

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan 20.—A veteran labor chieftain, 74, disclosed today he had been kidnaped in 1931—and shortly afterward his aide, 90, named Murray Humphreys, former Chicago public enemy No. 1, as one of the recipients of the $50,000 ransom.

Robert C. Fitchie, 74, president of the Milk Wagon Drivers' Union, related the story of his abduction for the first time in public from the witness stand at a United States Board of Tax Appeals hearing.

Steve Sumner, 90-year-old secretary of the union, then testified the ransom was collected by Humphreys and George ("Red") Barker, henchman of Al Capone. Barker since has been slain.

Their dramatic testimony was given at a hearing on Humphreys' appeal from a Government claim of $37,165 for taxes on his income in 1930, 1931 and 1932. John D. Kiley, counsel for the Internal Revenue Bureau, contended Humphreys had neglected to include the ransom in his returns.

Humphreys, a dapper, well-groomed man of 40, listened calmly to the accounts of the union officials.

Fitchie said he was kidnaped December 21, 1931, by four gunmen who accosted him after he had driven to his home and dismissed two policemen who had been detailed to guard him because of a previous attempt on his life.

He reported he was forced to crouch in the rear seat of a car. After an hour's drive, he added, he was blindfolded and taken into a house. He was held captive there for two days and two nights, he said, while he wrote three notes, one of them to Sumner. On December 23, he recalled, he was blindfolded again, driven to a West Side alley and released.

Fitchie testified he did not recognize any of the abductors, and saw Humphreys for the first time at the hearing Wednesday.

Sumner related that in keeping with telephone and written instructions he drove to a West Side street, left $50,000 in $100 bills on the front seat and retired to watch developments from an unseen point of vantage. One of the men who retrieved it, he said, was Barker. Four months later, he added, Humphreys came to the union office and introduced himself.

Sumner reported he recognized Humphreys as "the one I saw coming around the car to get the money."

Eccles Declines Bid to Debate With Byrd

Senator Accepts But Federal Reserve Chairman Is Too Busy

Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, last night declined an invitation to debate on Government spending with Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, before the Academy of Political Science in New York, February 24.

Eccles, stanch defender of the new Federal spending program, and Senator Byrd, its sharpest critic, recently aired their conflicting philosophies in open letters and radio talks.

Byrd wired his acceptance of the debate invitation received from W. Randolph Burgess, president of the academy. But Eccles wrote Burgess he had received many such invitations, but, because of pressure of other engagements, was unable to accept.

The controversy between Byrd and Eccles will continue over the radio, however. Last Monday Byrd expressed his opposition to "deficit spending" in a national broadcast. Next Monday night Eccles will defend his own views in a similar broadcast.

$15,000 Is 'Found' To Handle Growing Relief Load Here

Additional case workers to handle the increased load at the public assistance division, caused by influx of released WPA clients, were provided yesterday by the Commissioners, who "found" $5,000 to pay their salaries and $10,000 to prevent furloughs of the present staff.

The District WPA has released 1,100 persons, supposedly eligible for old-age assistance and aid to dependent children, who have swamped the public assistance division.

Many are apparently eligible for benefits but have been denied because of an inadequate staff of case workers to investigate them.

Commissioners Ask U.S. Pay for Water It Uses

22% Rates Increase Needed Otherwise, Congress Is Told

District residents would be spared an increase in water rents, to finance proposed extension of the water system, under a recommendation submitted to Congress yesterday by the Commissioners.

The commissioners agreed that the Federal Government should pay for water it now uses free, at the established rates.

U. S. Uses 18% of Water Free

The report shows that expansion and improvements to the water system, not including normal extensions, would require $10,000,000 before 1950.

The report states that approximately 28 per cent of the total water supply was consumed by governmental agencies, charitable and other non-revenue accounts. The Federal Government was the biggest user of water, consuming 18 per cent of the total at no cost.

In their letter of transmittal the commissioners stated:

Might Give 10% Discount

"The commissioners believe that the Federal Government should reimburse the water fund for water used, at the established meter rates, possibly with a preferential discount of about 10 per cent. With such additional revenue, funds sufficient to meet a large part of the cost of the next major expansion can be provided.

"In any event, funds necessary for this expansion in excess of those accumulated at the time required should be met by a Federal loan similar to the present Public Works Administration loans.

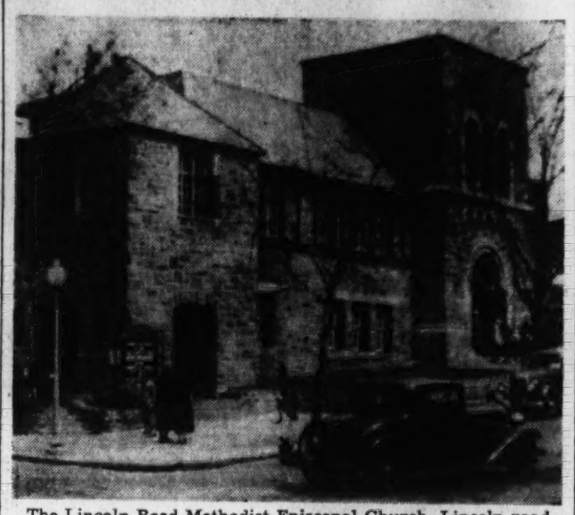
Church of the Week

Lincoln Road Brotherhood To Conduct Church Service



The Lincoln Road Methodist Episcopal Church, Lincoln road and U street northeast

Rev. Earl D. Miller Will Be Morning Guest Speaker

Outstanding for service rendered to church, community and city is the Men's Brotherhood of Lincoln Road Methodist Episcopal Church, slated to conduct the worship program there tomorrow night. The Rev. Earl D. Miller, of Bethesda, will speak on "The God of Everyday."

A feature of the occasion and a monthly custom will be the welcoming of new members into the brotherhood and the recognition of the newly organized ladies' auxiliary of the organization, with Mrs. Zelma Underwood as leader.

Participating in the special service will be the "moving spirits" behind the men's unit, including James S. Williams, president; Charles Trout, vice president; Bernard Blakely, G. A. Bonnet, Harold Searls, Earl G. Kleinheinz, John S. Copenhaver, Jarvis Cissel, John L. Rogers, jr., Fred Wagner, Clarence Pope, George W. Montgomery, Benjamin R. Black, Ernest J. Shutt and others. The Rev. C. M. Wright, a retired minister, also is active.

Rev. Mr. Stone (Minister)

These men, through sponsoring neighborhood and local missionary work, revivals and other projects, as well as putting their hands to building repairs and renovations to save money for the congregation, have enabled the brotherhood to become a parish bulwark since the coming of the Rev. Reginald Heber Stone, D.D.

Standing side by side with the men of the congregation is the Ladies' Guild, which has succeeded in raising sufficient funds through bazaars and other means to pay more than 35 per cent of the cost of the newly built parsonage, as well as completely furnishing it.

The guild also is co-operating in the drive to pay off the church's $21,000 mortgaged debt in 10 years, confident that this goal can be accomplished through the efforts of such workers as Mrs. Arthur Bonnet, president; Mrs. Lida Kost, vice president; Mrs. Grace Cissel, Mrs. Clara Stine, Mrs. Annie Beck, Mrs. Hannah Bradley and others.

J. S. Williams (Men's Chief)

The plans to clear the debt are being carried on under the leadership of the board of trustees, headed by H. A. Bradley and including G. A. Bonnet, Harold Searls, Earl G. Kleinheinz, John S. Copenhaver, Jarvis Cissel and John L. Rogers. Bonnet is church treasurer, Frank Corliss serves as financial secretary, and Harold Mericle is finance committee chairman.

Music is under the direction of William Stevens, with Margaret Morgan Harry as organist. The choir, which gives its services voluntarily, will aid in the dramatic presentation of Channing Pollock's "The Fool" on February 7. Among officers of the choir are Mrs. B. H. Black, president, and Miss Ethel Baer, music custodian.

Other active groups at Lincoln road are the Sunday school, of which Mrs. Alice Haffy and Mrs. John L. Rogers are superintendent and assistant, respectively; the Boy Scouts, Troop No. 28, under Hugh Black, boasting five eagle scouts, and the library, directed by John L. Roberts, jr., and Robert Searls.

W. T. Stevens (Choirmaster)

Young people's work is conducted through the Youth Council, with Mrs. Aurelia Carter as leader, and embraces the Epworth League and the Young People's Bible Class, taught by the Rev. Mr. Stone, and with Earl Wilhelm president, and the Hiller Bible Class, of which Mrs. Stone is president and Mrs. Robert Laughlin vice president.

The pastor, who occupied the Union Square (Baltimore) Methodist pulpit for 10 years, was for some time engaged in missionary work in Montana.

Prof. Glenn Clark To Give Two Talks

Glenn Clark, professor of English in Macalester College, St. Paul, Minn., author of many books on prayer and founder of several religious camps for students, will speak twice here Thursday under interdenominational auspices in the auditorium of First Congregational Church.

His tentative topics are, at 4:30 p. m., "Levers of Prayer" and, at 8 p. m., "Overcoming Anger and Fear as the First Step Toward Spiritual Life."

Social Welfare Service Set At Cathedral

Protestant Union Meeting to Stress Co-operation Here

The Rev. T. Guthrie Speers, D. D., pastor of Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church in Baltimore, will address a union service on religious and social welfare tomorrow at 4 p. m. at Washington Cathedral.

The Rev. Horace E. Cromer, president of the Washington Federation of Churches; Dr. E. H. Pruden and Dr. John W. Rustin will assist Dr. Noble C. Powell, dean of the Cathedral, in conducting the service, which is under the auspices of the departments of social welfare of the District of Columbia Church Federation and the Episcopal Church.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Washington, will introduce Dr. Speers, who was long associated with Dr. Harry E. Fosdick in New York and is a member of the committee on social education and action of the Presbyterian Church.

A program of well-known hymns and a special order of service have been developed so that the audience may take part in the service.

Purposes of the service are three: To stimulate interest of social workers in religion and the Church;

To stimulate churches and their members to take a more active and intelligent interest in social welfare and social work;

To encourage closer relations between the churches and social agencies of Washington and vicinity.

The committee in charge of the service includes the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, chairman of the department of social welfare of the church federation; the Rev. John L. Mixon, director of that department; the Rev. W. L. Darby, secretary of the federation; the Rev. J. G. Armstrong, of Christ Church, Georgetown; the Rev. Clyde Brown, diocesan missioner of the Episcopal Church, and Canons W. M. Bradner and Anson P. Stokes, of the Cathedral.

Canon Bradner also will preach the sermon at the 11 a. m. service in the Cathedral tomorrow. Other Cathedral services include Holy Communion at 7:30 and 9:30 a. m. in the Bethlehem Chapel.

The Bishop's garden will be open to visitors from noon to 4 p. m. and pilgrimages through the Cathedral will be held following the 11 a. m. and 4 p. m. services.

Youth in Capital Churches

Youth week at the Metropolitan Baptist Church will culminate in the two church services tomorrow, both of which the young people will conduct.

In the morning they will hold a symposium on "Soul-Winning, the Normal Expression of Vital Religion." Ethel Holmes, John Perry and Mildred Miller will speak.

At the evening service the Rev. Robert Savage will preach on "Christ's Challenge to Youth."

At Hamline Methodist Church, too, youth will take the helm for the evening service. Howard Stingle, of the Epworth League, will preside while Carol Mann offers the opening prayer, Hugh Kirk leads the responsive reading, Margaret Nelson reads the Scripture and music is offered by the quartet consisting of Earl Givens, Olive Stockdill, Florence Yeager and Florence May Evans. Martha Catlin and Frank Mervine will speak on "The Quest of Youth."

Dramatics, and preparations therefor, fill the air at St. Paul's Episcopal Rock Creek Parish. While the Rock Creek Players are busy rehearsing one comedy, "Fast Workers," the Young People's Fellowship is working hard on a three-act farce, "The Smiling Cow."

The first will be presented February 3 in the parish auditorium as a benefit for the Episcopal Home for Children.

Miss Laura Dove and J. Fred Parsons are directing the fellowship's play, which will be entered in competition with those produced by other fellowships of the diocese and presented in the church auditorium February 9. Rock Creek Parish won this competition six out of seven years prior to 1937, when they didn't compete. They are out to reassert their supremacy.

The Washington Baptist Youth Federation will meet at the National Baptist Memorial Church tomorrow at 7 a. m. for their first breakfast club of the year. The Rev. Robert Savage, assistant pastor of Metropolitan Church, will speak following the breakfast.

Drama again comes forward as Publicizer Doris Hinsch, of the Church of the Atonement Luther League, announces details of the "play tournament" February 3. The Ladies' Bible Class, the Intermediates and the Luther League each will present a one-act play that night. Judges will decide which was the best play, and members of the winning cast will receive blue ribbons and, Miss Hinsch says, "quite a bit of honor." The best actor or actress will also get a "specially made" blue ribbon and, we suppose, quite a bit more honor.

For the "hint" you ask, Doris, do the leading players in these dramas have names? Or do the judges? For our own files, when is there to be a dress rehearsal? And just an item, where are these plays to be presented?

The Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Epworth League will hold a "then and now" program at 6:30 p. m. tomorrow. L. I. McDougle, who was active in the league years ago, will bring several of old leaguers to the meeting and tell of its programs in former years.

"The Relation Between the City and the Church" will be explored by the Reformation Senior Luther League at 6:45 p. m., with Anna Rees, Evelyn Detlefs, Mary Renkel, Jack Lynn, George Kern and Bruce Hulett doing the speaking. Helen Willis and Paul Gagben will discuss "Self-Made or God-Made" also.

Schacht Out, Funk to Unify Nazi Finances

His Erasure From German Economy Believed Provoked

High officials here yesterday saw in the erasure of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht from the German economic picture a breaking of the final link between the Reich and financial orthodoxy.

Actually, they pointed out, Schacht has been without influence in Hitler's Germany for two years or more, although it was he who originated the system of barter trade trade restrictions and the financing of public works (including armaments) with treasury notes. Therefore, it was said, the only importance of his removal as president of the Reichsbank is psychological.

"As long as Schacht remained at the head of the Reichsbank," said one official, "there were many who hoped that he would be able to bring Germany back to a more sane economy. Those more familiar with the situation have known, however, that this was a forlorn hope."

Ouster Called Forced

One American official, thoroughly familiar with conditions in Germany, said that Dr. Schacht had been "deliberately provocative" in his dealings with Nazi leaders, and had practically forced them to oust him.

Schacht believed the barter system that he originated was to be merely temporary. As Nazi leaders indicated that it was to be a permanent policy, Schacht denounced it as a "medieval method." He said it was "incredibly barbarous to exchange machinery against grain, radios against tobacco, or rubber against cotton, as if we were savages bartering ivory against shells."

Walter Funk, the former Hamburg newspaper editor who succeeds Schacht as Reichsbank president, said in Berlin yesterday that Germany henceforth will buy "from the Balkans and Turkey" what it has been getting from the United States.

The news service Dieust Aus Deutschland said that Funk's appointment ment "the elimination of the United States as a source of supply" for Germany.

Buys Our Cotton

Commerce Department officials pointed out that Germany, under its policy of self-containment, has been buying in this country only those things which she could not get elsewhere. Even so she has been buying almost twice as much from the United States as this country has been buying from her, a situation which obviously could not long continue.

Cotton is America's principal export to Germany, with petroleum products next. Trade experts expressed doubt that Germany could get sufficient cotton from Turkey or the Balkans, or sufficient oil from Rumania.

American imports from Germany include chemical products, medical supplies, cameras, pottery and glassware.

Financial Picture Gloomy

The removal of Dr. Schacht, it is pointed out here, comes at a time when the German financial picture is particularly gloomy. In 1937 she had a favorable trade balance of 400,000,000 marks, but in 1938 this situation was practically reversed. Germany's absorption of Austria, it said, was largely responsible. It was necessary to import large quantities of food for Austria. Meantime Austria's tourist trade, an important item in her economy, was shattered.

Douglas Miller, United States commercial attache, now in Washington, will not return to the Nazi capital, it was reported at the Commerce Department yesterday.

Miller came home on a "routine visit" shortly after Ambassador Hugh Wilson was summoned here for a report on Nazi persecution of the Jews.

Schacht

Germany before the Nazis came to power January 30, 1933.

An end for the time being, at least, to hopes of several hundred thousand Jews they would be able to emigrate with aid of the intergovernmental refugee committee.

Funk will keep his post as economics minister, thus uniting—under Field Marshal Goering, director of the four-year plan to make Germany self-sufficient—the important jobs of financing the Nazi government and selling its products abroad.

Schacht, who had the confidence of foreign bankers, once held this same double-barreled position until he quit as economics minister October 26, 1937. Funk succeeded him in the economics post a month later.

With the exception of three years, Schacht had guided the Reichsbank since 1923.

Hitler Letter Lauds Schacht

In a letter to Schacht today Hitler said he took "the occasion of your recall from office" to thank him for his services and to say that Schacht's name "above all will be connected forever with the first epoch of national rearmament."

A communique said that in the future Schacht would "be assigned to solution of special tasks." He remains in the cabinet as minister without portfolio.

In a letter to Funk today Hitler ordered him to Nazify the bank "which was withdrawn from supreme sovereignty of the Reich by the Dawes plan," and transform it "into a German bank of issue unconditionally subjected to the sovereignty of the state, in conformity with national socialist principles."

WALTHER FUNK

Funk also was enjoined by Hitler to safeguard "the absolute stability of wages and prices" and maintain the present value of the mark at about 2.49 to the dollar.

Congress to Blame for WPA Politics, Norris Contends

Hopkins

on earth I would want in my cabinet is Harry Hopkins."

Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts, member of the Sheppard campaign expenditures committee that disclosed evidence of "politics in relief," likewise declared he would vote for Hopkins, as he pointed to the "wide divergence of opinion as to whether he is fairly entitled to exoneration." Both Gillette and Walsh stressed the "personal prerogative of the President in naming his own Cabinet officers.

As the debate already has lasted nine hours and several Senators still are scheduled to talk, party leaders agreed at close of the session yesterday to limit Monday's oratory to 30 minutes per speaker. Confirmation is considered certain as not more than 30 negative votes are expected.

Senator Tydings, whose right-wing views have earned him the enmity of New Dealers, took the floor immediately after Senator Norris had said that "an injustice is being done Mr. Hopkins" in placing upon him the responsibility for politics in relief.

Tydings denounced the President for "invading" Maryland, condemned alleged use of WPA and PWA to sway the voters and scoffed at Democrats who in former days he said had barred men from the Senate on grounds of corruption, but now were attempting to shield the WPA.

After going into some detail on the size of the majority by which he had been elected, Tydings asserted he would spend at least two more years in the Senate, deprived of control over Federal patronage because of his opposition to the Administration.

He then alluded to a newspaper statement quoting Senator Minton, of Indiana, assistant majority whip, to the effect that Tydings would not be seated by the Senate because large corporations had "poured so much money into Maryland" to insure his election.

Minton, who had seated himself directly in front of Tydings, jumped to his feet, obtained recognition, and then shouted: "It's a dirty lie."

While spectators leaned forward in excitement, Minton angrily declared that "it's the first time I ever heard of it." He asked Tydings to name the newspaper in which the statement appeared.

Tydings thereupon expressed his apologies to Minton saying he should have consulted the Senator before quoting the statement publicly. After the session, Tydings said he intended to get the clippings from his files and show them to Minton.

The Marylander, whose address attracted about 50 Senators to the chamber, declared that in the primaries, "every artifice of the National Government, without stint, that could be used was used in the cruelest and most brutal manner in the most unwarranted interference in the affairs of a sovereign State in the history of this republic."

Shouting that he had told the Maryland WPA administrator at the time of his appointment not to allow "the slightest scintilla of political pressure to be exerted in the conduct of WPA in Maryland," Tydings affirmed that this standard had been adhered to by the administrator—and also by himself.

He alleged that "others in the administration of WPA in my State were not so careful," and accused them of discharging WPA workers who "had Tydings pictures on their automobiles and wore Tydings buttons." He said "in another section of the State, the WPA foreman handled the campaign of that great liberal who was my opponent in the last election."

Tydings accused "higher authorities than Mr. Harry Hopkins" of failure to keep politics out of relief works.

"PWA was used in my State for political purposes not in mere jobs of a few here and there—but a $3,000,000 bridge was dangled before the eyes of the people of my State in an effort to sway them from allegiance to my cause in one of the most disgraceful exhibitions of using political funds ever heard of in the history of the world."

"There is not a Senator on the floor who will dare say that is not the case," Tydings declared as he pounded his desk. He charged that President Roosevelt had driven to the bridge site in Southern Maryland, together with former Representative David J. Lewis, Tydings' primary opponent, so Lewis could take credit for the structure.

Roosevelt Would Tax District More

District

which was mentioned specifically by the President.

Calls for More Nurses

"I asked 150 beds for children, rather than the present 60; kitchen facilities to serve present capacity of 1,100 beds, rather than the 350 beds in use when kitchen was planned, and more adequate housing for the staff. In addition, we need 108 additional nurses in health institutions of the District—26 at Glenndale Hospital and 80 at Gallinger. The U. S. Public Health Service has estimated we need 150 new field nurses. We were to get one new unit of 12 this year. If we could even increase the amount to two units as a result of the President's interest, my gratitude would be profound," he said.

Representative Collins (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the House sub-committee on District Appropriations, declined to comment. He was a foe, however, of the Jacobs report, to wnich the President evidently referred, and was credited with preventing its recommendation of a Federal contribution of but $2,500,000 going across.

Plans Another Meeting

Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, new chairman of the House District Committee, declared he was convinced in a conference at the White House this week that the President "is thoroughly conversant with District relief." He indicated another meeting would be scheduled.

President Roosevelt made it clear at his press conference that he has given considerable thought to local problems and hinted that he might favor making a change in the District form of government with a view to effecting improvements.

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, chairman of the Senate sub-committee on District Appropriations, is advocating a rearrangement of District and Federal proportions of local government costs in accordance with the area occupied by each. He estimates that on this basis the Federal Government should bear slightly more than 20 per cent of the burden—or between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. In recent years the Federal contribution has been about $5,000,000 annually.

Japanese Push Beyond Hankow

Shanghai, Jan. 20 (AP).—Slowly fighting deeper into the heart of China, two Japanese columns at present are expanding the buffer zone around Hankow, fallen Chinese provisional capital.

These columns are pushing westward and northwestward, again threatening cities up the Yangtze River beyond Hankow. They were reported half way to Shasi, Hupeh Province river port.

Poles Assured Of French Aid Against Reich

Alliance Holds Good Despite Munich Accord, Bonnet Declares

By John Elliott

Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, Jan. 20.—Despite the Munich Accord, the alliance between France and Poland still holds good, Georges Bonnet, French foreign minister, intimated in the Chamber of Deputies today.

His statement was the first public declaration of a French statesman on the attitude of the French government toward its Eastern Europe treaty engagements, since partition of its former ally, Czecho-Slovakia, last autumn.

[Gen. Maurice Gamelin, chief of the staff of national defense, and Vice Admiral Jean Darlan, chief of the naval staff, tonight unexpectedly postponed their scheduled departure on a tour of inspection in north Africa, the Associated Press said.

[The postponement was not officially explained. Persons close to the foreign office indicated it might be for only two or three days.

[It was believed the defense chiefs might have been ordered to remain in Paris for a possible session of the National Defense Council or a possible secret session of the Chamber of Deputies for discussion of the dangers to France of a Spanish insurgent victory.—Editor's note.]

Bonnet will make a lengthy expose of the Polish question in a speech in the foreign affairs debate in the Chamber next Tuesday. His brief intervention today indicates the French government still considers it is bound by its alliances in eastern Europe.

This means that if Poland is attacked by Germany, France, despite the construction of the Siegfried line in the Rhineland and despite her failure to assist Czecho-Slovakia last September, will come to the aid of the Slav republic.

Bonnet received the Polish Ambassador, Jules Lukasiewicz, at the Quai d'Orsay this morning and talked with him about an hour. Diplomatic circles here are also curious to know whether Bonnet will renew France's obligations under the Franco-Soviet pact, when he speaks on Tuesday.

Passions aroused by the Spain controversy flared up in the Chamber this afternoon in the foreign affairs debate and caused such an uproar that Speaker Edouard Herriot had to suspend the sitting.

Engineers Urged To Study Women

Richmond, Va., Jan. 20 (AP).—Dr. John C. Parker, president of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, recommended today that engineers study the "unscientific, capricious, but sound, prejudice" of women to make their developments click.

Speaking before the annual meeting of six Virginia organizations of engineers and architects, Dr. Parker, vice president of the Consolidated Edison Co., New York, suggested that engineers set as their goal "a fuller, richer and happier life for the individuals of society."

economic and cultural of Japan, Manchukuo and China."

[No lasting peace, he declared, can be hoped for unless the three nations are speedily united "for the establishment of a new order to replace the old."—Editor's note.]

Arita declared in his annual message:

Japan stands on her announced determination to create a new order in East Asia based on cooperation between the Empire, China and Manchukuo but she hopes at the same time to develop East Asian prosperity to a point where all the world will benefit.

Japan intends to enforce certain restrictions and regulations in China and Manchukuo in spheres having a vital bearing on national defense but these measures are to be "confined to the minimum requirements."

Japan will attempt to link the economy of East Asia to that of the world and "contribute to the general prosperity of mankind."

If France permits the transport of munitions from French Indo-China into nationalist China, Japan will take "proper steps."

Japan hopes that a new Central Chinese government soon will be organized to "co-operate with us for the settlement" of the present Chinese-Japanese war.

"Continues to Fight Communism"

Japan will continue to fight the Soviet-Russian controlled Communist Internationale, which she blames for much of the present disorder in the world, including the civil war in Spain and the continuance of the China conflict. She believes the comintern aims at the "bolshevization of China and the entire world."

Japan's relations with Soviet Russia still are strained, particularly in North Saghalien Island, where Russia is interfering with Japanese oil and coal interests, and in the fisheries question.

Arita did not mention the United States and Britain by name, but it was obvious that he referred to these powers when he said:

"The Japanese government plans to limit to a necessary minimum all restrictions on the economic activities of other powers under the proposed system for Japan, Manchukuo and China.

Naval Air Bases

With the possible exception of the provisions for Guam, the bill authorizing and directing the Navy to proceed with the construction of 12 naval aviation bases should meet with little opposition.

It is all but universally agreed that the present and prospective defense needs of the United States require an expansion of our air force. Differences on this point arise only in connection with the amount of expansion necessary. The Administration is not letting itself be stampeded by those who want a vast and sudden increase in this Nation's air power. Both the Army and the Navy air establishments are, if the President's views prevail, to be strengthened within strictly reasonable bounds.

It is not enough, however, to build the desirable number of additional fighting planes, to equip them and to man them. The strategic setup must be such that this expanded air force will be in a position to function efficiently as an integral arm of national defense. It is necessary, therefore, that the bases from which the planes operate should be made adequate.

Of the 12 bases whose development is recommended by the Naval Board, three are in the zone of the West Indies; two are in Alaska; one in Hawaii; and the remainder are on other Pacific islands. Once built, these establishments would greatly increase the range of naval planes. In other words, the contemplated bases would have the same relation to air power that naval bases have to sea power.

So far as Guam is concerned, the authorization—and the President emphasizes that it is only an authorization—is limited to $5,000,000. This sum obviously would not allow any real fortification of the island, but would serve to establish harbor works, hangars, shops and barracks.

Whether such action should constitute the preliminary move in the direction of actually fortifying Guam has not yet been determined. That question involves considerations of policy regarding which sharp differences of opinion exist. But there will probably be few such differences with respect to the 11 other naval air base projects stipulated in the Vinson bill.

Balkanizing America

The problem of trade barriers between the States properly took first place when the Council of State Governments opened its fourth assembly here on Thursday. State officials as a group are now genuinely alarmed over this trend toward restrictive legislation. They may well be.

An address prepared by Gov. Stark of Missouri and read by Frank Bane, executive director of the council, pointed out that 30 States now give preference to their own residents in purchasing supplies. Some States have established "ports of entry" through which all commerce from neighboring areas must pass. The trend toward what Gov. Stark calls "Balkanizing this formerly great free-trade area" is definitely disturbing.

Unless this movement can be stopped and existing barriers wiped out, there will be, as Gov. Stark suggested, real danger that "we may begin to develop interstate antagonism not essentially different from international rivalries rampant today." Such antagonism is already incipient in the "beer wars" between a number of States and the punitive trucking restrictions that impede interstate traffic.

In many instances these barriers have been erected in the mistaken belief that any device for restraint of free trade which the Supreme Court does not invalidate may be legitimately employed. The States must realize that the grant of power over interstate commerce to the Federal Government does not of itself prevent devices that may be used to halt trade at State borders. If the great advantages of a free market extending from coast to coast are to be preserved, the States will have to adhere to the spirit as well as the letter of the Constitution.

Too many citizens and officials look to the Supreme Court to preserve the Constitution and the traditional relationship between the States and the Federal Government. Obviously the court cannot assume all the responsibility in this vital matter. If the division of powers is to be maintained in balance, our legislatures and executives must restrain their policies in accord with the principles imbedded in the Constitution.

In the case of interstate tariff barriers the States have a clear obligation to set their own houses in order. To some extent their usurpation of the Federal power to control interstate commerce may be in retaliation for the absorption of State functions by the National Government. If so, it only emphasizes the desirability of taking a new long-range view of the Federal system. State invasion of national powers, as well as national invasion of State powers, is disruptive of the American form of Government.

Schacht Is Shelved

Dr. Hjalmar Schacht has been a conspicuous figure in the Nazi regime primarily because he has had the rare courage to criticise the government's financial excesses and the hardihood to resist efforts to bring the Reichsbank completely under state control. Indeed Dr. Schacht has been such an open and persistent non-conformist that the outside world has often wondered why he was not shorn of power long ago, instead of being kept in office despite his repeated attempts to resign.

Apparently Dr. Schacht's prolonged tenure of office as head of the Reichsbank has been due to a general conviction, shared by Hitler, that he is a financial wizard. Unquestionably he has shown remarkable skill in adapting the orthodox financial methods of a capitalistic regime to the demands of a socialistic state in which the welfare of the individual is an entirely subordinate consideration. For some time Dr. Schacht was apparently able to reconcile these conflicting philosophies, or at any rate to satisfy the demands of the rulers of the National Socialist State, without abandoning allegiance to the principles of liberalism.

Thus, he never ceased to express his dislike for the crude system of barter and bilateral agreements to which Germany, largely as a matter of necessity, resorted when her exchange mechanism broke down. He constantly warned the country of the inflationary perils of continuous deficit financing. Yet he was remarkably skillful in driving shrewd bargains with other nations and in devising plans for meeting the government's enormous spending requirements. The fact that his admonitions were tolerated and his advice sought was significant. It showed that the leaders of the new regime were not ready to break completely with the past, not prepared to embark upon the course of streamlined Bolshevism which now seems indicated.

Last year, however, Dr. Schacht was superseded as Minister of Economics by Herr Funk—a good National Socialist rather than an economic and financial expert. Now comes the news of the wizard's summary dismissal from the presidency of the Reichsbank. This action is far more than an indication that Dr. Schacht is personally in disfavor. It suggests that the left-wing Nazis are at last ready to throw off all the traditional restraints and to go ahead with plans of socialization for which the only parallel is to be found in Soviet Russia.

The Fuehrer's instructions to the new Minister of Economics to transform the Reichsbank into "a German bank of issue unconditionally subjected to the sovereignty of the state in conformity with National Socialist principles," is a revealing commentary upon the trend of the times. And the fact that Dr. Schacht's dismissal was followed by announcement of a complete breakdown of negotiations for financing the emigration of Jews from Germany is another significant development. It shows that the Nazi regime is becoming increasingly contemptuous of world opinion.

Germany is now irrevocably embarked upon a form of planned economy that will strain her resources to the utmost. The Nazi State is seeking to achieve its objectives by means that are becoming increasingly ruthless. There is no room in such an economy for even so shrewd an opportunist as Dr. Schacht. His dismissal emphasizes the increasingly socialistic development of the Nazi movement. It is a characteristic just as important, and just as anti-liberal, as the nationalistic aspect.

Continuing Controls

The President's request for continuance of the exchange stabilization fund, and prolongation of his authority to alter the gold content of the dollar beyond June 30, when the authorizing law is due to expire, will probably meet with little opposition either inside or outside Congress. For better or worse broad powers of control over the exchange value of the dollar have been vested in the President. It would be unwise to divest him of those powers at a time when the international monetary, economic and political situation is highly unsettled and productive of extreme and unpredictable fluctuations in currency values.

The tripartite currency agreement, embracing this country, Great Britain and France, has not achieved real exchange stabilization. But if there had been no such agreement, and no official mechanism for moderating the severity of exchange fluctuations, the confusion and disorder that have resulted from unstable currencies would undoubtedly have been much worse.

From present indications there is small reason to expect in the near future a return to a peaceful economic world order which would make possible the re-establishment of stable currencies linked to gold. In a world constantly disturbed by threats of war and economic disorders which lead to mass migration of capital from country to country, all basis for an orderly exchange of goods and capital is lacking. Without it, nations are compelled to rely upon poor substitutes for the self-regulating exchange mechanism of former days.

It is to be hoped that no use will be made of the power further to devalue the dollar. But in view of recent severe declines in the value of the pound, it is not undesirable to have in reserve a protective weapon with which to offset the effect of any future drop in sterling exchange so sharp as to be obviously detrimental to our national interests.

Where Help Is Needed

President Roosevelt's interest in the District and its problems is gratifying to the local community. His concern over Washington's health record is shared by virtually every citizen. If the President uses his influence to obtain more adequate funds for the Health Department and other hard-pressed local agencies, his efforts are certain to meet with warm appreciation.

Mr. Roosevelt properly notes that more adequate appropriations for public welfare activities here will necessitate more revenue to keep the District out of debt. That is why experts have been at work since last summer on a new tax system for the District. Only a few days ago the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation submitted to Congress new levies that would raise an estimated total of $6,775,000. Every one familiar with the fiscal affairs of the Nation's Capital agrees that new tax legislation is necessary.

It is impossible, however, to agree with the President's view that taxes should be raised first and that the question of fiscal relations between the Federal and local governments should then be examined. The time to adopt a fiscal formula is when the issue of additional revenue is under discussion. Otherwise the entire burden of meeting the Capital City's expanding needs is likely to be placed on local taxpayers and the incentive for Congress to assume its share of the obligation will be seriously weakened.

Apparently the President has been examining some of the old reports comparing taxes in Washington with those of other cities. Before reaching any conclusion on this point he should take note of all the reports on the subject. A Treasury survey some years ago found the tax burden here to be somewhat lighter than in comparable cities. But a later report by L. H. Parker, then chief of staff of the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, showed: "(1) Washington ranks third in magnitude of per capita tax burden, although only fourteenth in population. (2) All the cities which have a greater tax burden than Washington have a greater population."

Despite this finding, the effort to regulate taxes here by what other cities are collecting has long since been discredited. No real basis of comparison exists. Far more equitable and practical is the formula proposed by Senator Overton for adjustment of the Federal payment to the District on the basis of the Government's tax-exempt land holdings here.

President Roosevelt could render a great service to this disfranchised community by giving his support to that reasonable formula. And it should be remembered that action on his part now, while the whole local revenue system is being overhauled, would be far more effective in meeting community needs than anything that may be recommended after new tax measures have been adopted.

"Sore Labour's Bath"

From the Kansas City Star

So sleep is only a habit, according to the findings of psychologists at the University of Chicago. If so, it is a pretty universal habit, and an extremely useful habit, which enables most of us to forget for a full one-third of each 24-hour day the cares and disappointments of the world.

As a matter of fact we can think of no single boon more kindly than the ability to sleep sweetly and peacefully. Unfortunates who find sleep hard to woo will testify fervently to this. To induce sleep, imaginary sheep have been counted by imcomputable myriads. Strange devices have been employed by those who found sleep nard to obtain by normal methods.

Not all men had the ability of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, to sleep even on horseback. Charles Dickens, for example, always carried a pocket compass, to arrange his bed properly, for he could not sleep unless the head pointed to the north. Prime Minister Gladstone found slumber difficult unless he could read, engraved on the foot of his bed, the Bible quotation: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee." On the other hand, Thomas Edison, able to go for long periods without sleep, could slumber for prodigious hours on a table, a floor or anywhere he happened to lie down when a particularly concentrating task was finished.

There are few things without which man cannot somehow makeshift to exist. But sleep is on the must list.

Vermont And Flood Control

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When your contributor, Dorothy Thompson, finds enough time, she should read a transcript of the hearings held by the House Flood Control Committee not long after the introduction in Congress of bills seeking Federal consent to the so-called New England flood-control compacts. If she will do so, she may discover therein reason enough for what she calls "executive interference" with blocked, allegedly, passage of a bill granting Federal consent.

When Gov. Aiken selected his 3-man committee to represent Vermont on the 12-man committee representing, besides Vermont, the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut, for the purpose of drafting the New England flood-control compact, he named to it Robert S. Fenton. Fenton, lobbyist for private utility companies, found at the meeting of the committee an old friend of his, Robert Upton, one of the three chosen to represent New Hampshire. Upton, an attorney, was on the pay roll of three or four private utilities, lobbying before the New Hampshire Legislature. To make a long story brief, the compact was drafted, approved by the Legislatures of the four States and sent to Congress for approval—which brings us back to the hearings before the House Flood Control Committee.

It had been discovered by the committee, following a report on the compact by the Federal Power Commission, that the drafting group had slipped into the compact a section which, if approved, would have permitted private utility companies to secure 999-year leases on dams built for flood control purposes. The witness was Paul Dever, highly esteemed attorney general of Massachusetts and one of the 12 who drafted the compact. He was asked: "Who put the power sections in the compact?" He replied: "We had to put them in to satisfy Vermont and New Hampshire." His words were echoed by the attorney general for Connecticut.

So, with private utilities peddling their power to consumers of electricity in Vermont and New Hampshire homes at 10 and 12 cents a kilowatt hour, Miss Thompson seeks to mold public opinion against Mr. Roosevelt by writing that Federal consent to the compact was blocked by "executive interference"—with, of course, the emphasis on "interference." I hope she's right again. I hope that it was "executive interference"—outright, downright, and forthright.

And what a lot of stuff Miss Thompson gets off about those Vermonters! Stuff—and I mean stuff—about "enormous and quite fierce Vermont patriotism." Wishful thinking mixed with a lot of sentimental rubbish build a mind-picture for Miss Thompson regarding how she wants to have Vermonters appear to the rest of us. Some of us, born and brought up in New England, know more about those folks than one recently moved in on us.

Policemen As Solicitors

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just been solicited by a policeman in uniform to purchase a ticket to the President's Birthday Ball. Having made commitments in behalf of another soliciting organization, I didn't buy.

I object, as I'm sure many others do, to the use of our uniformed police and fire personnel to canvass the city periodically for handouts, regardless of the worthiness of the cause they are espousing. These visits to my office with something to sell are becoming increasingly frequent, and I must say they are becoming increasingly annoying.

If policemen and firemen care to solicit while off duty in civilian clothes, more power to them. But it strikes me as being in decidedly poor taste to send out these men, or permit them to go out, in uniform to extract donations while the city keeps up with one of the most alarming crime records in the country.

As a taxpayer, I resent these periodic calls by our public servants. There are plenty of others to do necessary soliciting without adding our policemen and firemen to the army of peddlers, canvassers, solicitors, etc., who roam our downtown office buildings trying to make a living in spite of the annoyance they cause. Education For Tolerance And Peace

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been very much impressed recently by reading an announcement that the New York City board of education was inaugurating assemblies and instruction in racial and religious tolerance.

To my knowledge, this appears to be one of the first steps in a most admirable program, and I have long since wondered why it has not been taken before now. It is a step which might have linked with it the effort to abolish war, strife and much of the general discontent rife in the ranks of humanity. Apparently, however, humanity is not yet ready for the surcease of war, but must be educated for it. I think that statement has some meat in it—humanity must be educated for the surcease of war; must be educated to the wisdom of universal peace and think of that as the natural, the normal, the proper state of man.

Now, how are we to prevent war? Why, by the removal of the causes of war. And what are the causes of war? Why, we say they are usually economic, but I think we are generally agreed that there are such traits in the human make-up as greed, fear, selfishness, intolerance, self-magnified egotism, and the like. Would anyone disagree that the riddance of these traits would rid the world of war?

But how to be rid of these traits? Someone has said, as to the time for the beginning of a child's education, that it should be 100 years before the child is born. In other words, then, the education that is now being poured into our children toward the elimination of war by the elimination of its causes—greed, selfishness, intolerance, fear—will bear fruit in their grandchildren 100 years hence. There may be other ways to end war, but I think there are none more sure.

Then why not give expansion to the program being instituted by the New York City board of education for racial and religious tolerance? Why not institute some program of developing the moral and ethical side of our children in school? Begin now, with the children of all grades, to teach them the futility of war, the harm of these traits that lead to war, and contrariwise, the beauty and eventual value to all humankind of the cultivation by everyone of the opposite qualities.

Creed need not enter. The Gentile, the Jew, the Mormon, the Catholic, all agree on fundamental principles of the higher, the more spiritual life. Why should we hesitate to inculcate such principles in our children at school and thus develop their higher moral qualities? We speak of developing their character, but not enough direct, concentrated effort is made in that direction.

Skeptical On Spending

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Random and pertinent thoughts upon the possibilities of President Roosevelt deciding to run for a third term lead one to the following conclusions:

He will, so far as Congress and we are concerned, have bankrupted the country. If all his recommendations are passed he will be within $500,000,000 of a $45,000,000,000 national debt.

He will have to "spellbind" Congress and the Nation into the idea that more funds must be raised by increasing the national debt to allow him to continue his spending ideas; without which he will never be re-elected.

He has chosen 1929 as an average year, when we did a business of $80,000,000,000. This was the outstanding year financially and commercially in the history of our country.

Where is he going to find humans who will purchase this $80,000,000,000 output? By that time everybody might be on WPA, himself excepted.

If he fails for re-election he hopes to make the G. O. P. the goat. But the G. O. P. is no fool and probably will refuse to be drawn into "entangling" internal alliances and will let the Democrats try to save the "sinking ship." Anyone would hate to submit to Congress the budget for next year. As this has to be done in his message to Congress, he will not usher in the year of a Presidential election with probable happy results.

As taxpayers, we face a fearful outlook. What nation, may I ask, is carrying the normal tax load we are? War and preparedness measures make up the bulk of this load—of which we are to date exempt. Let us size up our President and act accordingly.

The Caribbean Islands

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Maj. George F. Eliot's proposal of constructing naval and aviation bases in the West Indies as part of our national defense program brings to mind the arguments President Thomas Jefferson used in urging the acquisition of the lands now known as the Louisiana Purchase.

In view of the existing international anarchy we will not be safe until title to these islands in the Caribbean Sea are transferred to America; for if any of the totalitarian powers obtained possession of any of these islands, our Eastern seaboard would be in peril.

Since the capitulation of the European democracies to Hitler at Munich was in part due to their repudiation of their war debts to America, which had alienated our support, it is necessary that they should pay these war loans before any future international crises should arise demanding our support.

National defense bases on these islands would protect the Eastern seaboard of this hemisphere and are indispensable to us. From these islands we import asphalt, petroleum, ores, and tropical fruits and other agricultural products. Negotiation should be initiated at once to secure the transfer of title of all of these islands as part payment on the war debts owed America.

Premature Robin

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Driving along Mount Vernon boulevard about 3 o'clock January 16, we espied a beautiful, husky-looking robin red breast perched upon the low railing, a mile distant this way, of Mount Vernon. He seemed bewildered at the snowy landscape, and I'm sure he thought to himself, he had miscalculated.

The Post Impressionist

Canterbury Ride

THE FIRST ONE George has privately labeled Mme. President. She is not fat but she is large. She wears large, flat, mannish shoes and light coats in cold weather without any fur on them. There's nothing fancy about her. She looks as if she could wield a gavel and run a house and work in an office, all without effort. At least, that's the impression George has.

He has no idea where she works or where she lives or what her name is. It's like that, too, with the others. He knows of them only what he has casually observed, in addition to, perhaps, a few chance remarks he has heard them make to someone else. They, in turn, have probably never seen him at all, nor do they know each other. Yet morning after morning they meet, all going always in the same direction. And though they did not assemble in a body at London's Tabard Inn, though they are not bound for a Canterbury shrine and though they tell no tales to while away the time of their trip, their trip has come to represent to George a sort of Canterbury ride.

The bus stops.

Mme. President, George and perhaps one or two others who do not stand out sharply, get on and the bus begins to move. The pilgrims, twentieth century types instead of fourteenth, have begun to gather up and down the street, and the modern Canterbury ride that is typical of all the cities in America has begun.

The second one appears her youngest at a little distance. She is inclined toward stoutness and she knows it, and she has a small foot and she knows that, too. George does not believe she is married.

The third one is a man who brings his morning paper with him. He is slightly built and is getting gray, and George believes he must have lived in Washington a long time because he takes so little notice of everything around him. Day after day he is content with his morning ride, reading his paper all the way, carefully folding the large sheets in half so that they will not be in anyone else's way. In the mildest winter weather this one objects to open windows, and he wears his overshoes when it rains. George has decided that the time has long since passed when the mild man's wife even has to remind him of them.

The fourth one is a short little woman who is either foreign or Jewish; George isn't sure. She wears the same coat every day and carries her lunch in a little brown package. She is always alone, and when she sits down her legs do not reach the floor of the bus. There is something rather appealing about her because she seems out of place in a busy world of clerks.

Then there are several blocks where no one gets on regularly. There used to be two brothers, somewhere in their twenties, well-dressed, who fitted neatly into the mold of "modern young businessmen," but George hasn't seen them lately and so surmises they must have moved. It may be, of course, that their jobs don't exist any more and that they have returned to whatever State they came from. That might have been any State in any part of America.

At the next corner there are always three or four. There is one George thinks of as the former chorine because she wears bright hats—red, green or any color at all—large pearl earrings, coats that are as bright as the hats and high-heeled patent leather shoes. Then the Sparrow gets on here, too. The Sparrow is a well-bred little lady with gray hair who moves with quick, nervous gestures and can never quite decide whether she wants this bus or would rather wait for the next.

The Sparrow has a friend, a tall man much younger than she, who has a large nose and an unhappy expression, as if he weren't quite satisfied with what life had given him but didn't know what to do about it.

The next one George thinks of as the Willowy One because she is tall and always has to run for the bus. She runs with a kind of swaying motion, her high heels biting at the pavement. She looks as if she has always missed her breakfast because she didn't get up in time because she didn't go to bed in time.

Then there is the Young Husband. George had thought of him for some time as the Young Husband just from watching him walk briskly toward the corner, imagining him kissing his wife good-by in an apartment kitchen trimmed in red. Probably they had a party that ended in the kitchen the night before, but even if that were true the Young Husband walks no less briskly, has no cobwebs in his brain that would make him any less aware of what he wants in life. All this George had thought before he saw that the man wears a wedding ring.

There are others, of course; one quiet one in brown George always thinks of as the Wren. All of them come and go, as is the way with Washington, but generally these can be counted on to appear daily. To George they are individuals, yet, like the Canterbury pilgrims, in some way each represents a human type.

The bus grinds to a stop. Someone gets on and the driver says: "Step right up, please! And kindly move to the rear of the bus!" To offices, to stores, to shops, the modern Canterbury ride moves on.

Provocation

THE LABOR REVIEW, of Minneapolis, prints on page 1 of its current edition a strangely interesting suggestion. It says that a recent issue of this column indicates that your correspondent has volunteered to provoke Tom Mooney or his friends to words or action that would be discrediting. As to whether this is prophecy or warning, the paper goes no further. Mussolini has sometimes said that if the press of one country or another didn't hush he might be provoked to something.

The column in question was a piece pointing out that Mooney was freed not by the Communists, whose leader, Josef Stalin, Mooney admires and who would have shot him quickly in similar circumstances as an opponent of the existing regime, but by the American people and the workings of the American system. It also pointed out that Mooney is not the leader or even a leader of American labor, and insisted that his release was a victory for the American people and American rights and a rebuke to the Communists and their way—which would have been to kill him. Mooney himself has expressed approval of the Communist way, for in a conversation with your correspondent in San Quentin about a year ago he justified the execution of the political heretics in Moscow on the ground that they were enemies of the state. He himself held Leon Trotsky guilty of the same capital offense without trial. He said Trotsky, too, was an enemy of the Russian state, and this verdict was delivered by a man who at that very moment was complaining that his own trial had been farcical.

THE MINNEAPOLIS paper calls this discussion the act of an agent provocateur. But Mooney needs no provocation to discreditable words. His words discredited him in advance of that writing with believers in the present system, for he has made no secret of his belief that the American form of society and government are outmoded or of his intention to work for a new and, as he believes, better one. A similar declaration against the existing system in Russia would be punished in the manner which Mooney justified as to the Moscow executions. So it is obvious that if the Communists had anything at all to do with Mooney's liberation and the belated vindication of the American system they betrayed their own principles.

The Minneapolis paper ignores completely the question of Communist support of Mooney and fails to mention his attitude on the Russian way with dissenters. It does not go into the fact that only recently in Russia men have been executed for framing innocent Russians, who, unlike Mooney, were quickly and permanently effaced on framed evidence. So they have their Sacco-Vanzetti and Mooney mishaps in the promised land and many Mooneys in their prisons for refusing to surrender the produce of their farms, many Mooneys in prison charged with inefficiency or laziness on their jobs.

THE COMMUNISTS who are so indignant about Mooney's case in this country have said nothing about these small irregularities in Russia, and on the question of prejured testimony in Mooney's trial it is fair to ask when any Communist became so sensitive about a small matter of perjury, if perjury would serve the party line. Indeed, any Communist who faltered at a little job of perjury on a party job would be severely disciplined.

Although there is a Communist Party in this free country (and who can imagine an Anti-Communist Party in Russia?), it is a question whether it is permissible to call a man Communist who refuses to admit that he is one. It is safe and legal to call a man even a Communist, a New Dealer, and many Communists call themselves New Dealers. It is even permissible to call a man a Republican, although a Communist might sue for vindication and ask damages on the ground that on some trip to Russia he might be placed in peril of death by the accusation.

THE LABOR REVIEW in this case seems to have been guilty of careless reading or of confusing labor in this country with communism. They are not synonymous, and the discussion which it regards as an attempt at provocation to some unnamed excess only insisted that if Mooney had been dealt with by this country as a man in corresponding circumstances would have been treated in communist Russia there would have been no big parade for Tom Mooney in San Francisco.

Use of Ft. Eustis Suggested to U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Resumption of military activities at Fort Eustis, Va., was discussed with ranking Federal officials yesterday by representatives of the Peninsula of Virginia Association of Commerce.

The group, including Sherrod N. Vaughan, secretary-manager of the association; Leo W. Wertheimer, president of the Retail Merchants Association, and Representative Bland (Democrat), Virginia, conferred with Robert H. Hinckley, member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson.

Bland said the group "merely explored the possibilities" of utilizing the old wartime training camp in the current program for expansion of the national defense. No concrete proposals were advanced or discussed, he said.

Congress' Reactions

By Mark Sullivan

The President Is Irritated

WHEN THE CONTROVERSY over the WPA appropriation began, when President Roosevelt asked for $875,000,000, and a House sub-committee fixed the figure at $725,000,000, much of Washington surmised that the President had asked more than he wanted or needed, that he probably realized that Congress would reduce the amount, and that he would be satisfied with the smaller amount.

That sort of trading strategy is not unfamiliar in politics, and in business is quite general. To ask for more than you expect is almost a rule of business trades. Some surmise, cynically, that the whole thing was done by arrangement, that Mr. Roosevelt had asked for more than he wanted in order to give his party in Congress an opportunity to cut the amount, and thus give an economy-conscious country a demonstration of the will to save.

But it was quickly clear that the affair had not been staged. Mr. Roosevelt, in his first press conference following the subcommittee's cut, told the newspapermen, that they ought to translate that cut of $150,000,000 into terms of human beings—into the number of men, women and children who would be dropped from relief. That, Mr. Roosevelt said, is what he had to do; and he urged the newspapermen to make the country see it in those terms. Later he sent out letters which make the action of the House seem to have a disagreeable quality—which imply that the President is human and that Congress is not.

Plainly, Mr. Roosevelt does not like what the House did. Plainly he wishes the country to know he does not like it. When Democratic Senator Adams, of Colorado, speaking with a manner of complaint, says that "propaganda is being spread" unfavorable to those in Congress who support the reduction, he presumably realizes that much of this propaganda emanates from the President, though some comes from organizations of workers on relief who want the larger amounts.

The situation throws light on the relations between the President and his party throughout this Congress. The Democratic leaders in Congress would go far toward preserving amity with the President. They wish strongly to preserve party peace as a condition making for party victory in the Presidential election in 1940.

But apparently the wish for peace does not rest as heavily on the President. He publicly resents a 17 per cent cut in an appropriation he asks for. Ordinarily any President, of either party, would be glad to get 83 per cent of what he asks from Congress, whether of appropriations or of general legislation. If Mr. Roosevelt resents a 17 per cent cut in a comparatively unimportant appropriation he is likely to resent even more the actions which Congress would prefer to take about some of the major proposals that are to come up.

CONGRESS—that is, the Democratic majority which controls it—would like to get along with the President. A program of giving him 83 per cent of what he wants would suit Congress perfectly. It would enable Congress to be independent without being belligerent. It would—or Congress undoubtedly thinks it ought to—satisfy the Presdient and preserve for himself a reasonable degree of appearance of leadership. We shall see shortly what Congress will do in the light of the President's irritated rejection of what Congress undoubtedly felt was a reasonable conformity to his leadership. Congress now might go either of two ways. To the President's irritation, Congress might react with irritation of its own. Or Congress, as a result of what is now happening, might fall back into that willingness to follow the President faithfully—which has been the almost uninterrupted attitude of every Congress since Mr. Roosevelt took office.

Congress is not likely to take the latter course. Mr. Roosevelt cannot, with this Congress, repeat what he did last spring with the old Congress. After that Congress had broken away mildly from the President's leadership, Mr. Roosevelt was able to convince them of his hold on the country, "throw a scare" into them and actually make them enact a measure they had previously rejected. But the Congress that thus succumbed last May was within a few weeks of going before the country for renomination.

THE PRESENT Congress will not go before the country for more than a year. Moreover, the present Congress is convinced, by the election last November, that the country wants just the sort of Congress that this is disposed to be, one that is a check upon the President. They think that even if the country still likes the President, it thinks dubiously of some of his measures and prefers a Congress that acts upon those measures according to its own judgment. At the same time the present Congress will wish to avoid public controversy with the President.

For that double course, the easy way is to do as little as is practicable. We shall probably have for two years a Congress that restricts itself closely to the indispensable routine legislation.

Capt. Dorsey One of 3 Named Rear Admirals

Navy Dispensary Chief Here and Captains Oman And Cather Promoted

Capt Benjamin Henry Dorsey, chief of the naval dispensary here, was one of three medical officers named for promotion to rear admiral yesterday.

President Roosevelt aproved the report of a selection boar headed by Rear Admiral Edward Stitt, U. S. N. retired, for promotion of captains to fill vacancies resulting from the retirement last fall of the surgeon general of the Navy, Rear Admiral P. S. Rossiter, and two other rear admiral billets, to become vacant this year.

The other officers selected were Capt. Charles Malden Oman, U. S. N., district medical officer at New York City, and Capt. David Clark Cather, U. S. N., who commands the naval hospital at Puget Sound, Wash.

The nomination of Oman marks the second time he has been proposed for rear admiral. President Hoover nominated him as surgeon general of the Navy in 1932, after he had been defeated for re-election, but the Senate refused to confirm the appointment. Capt. Cather lives at Herndon, Va.

Exit Schacht

By Barnet Nover

A Wizard Thrust Into Limbo

THE SIGNIFICANCE of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht's elimination as president of the German Reichsbank is more symbolic than real.

Dr. Schacht's influence has long been waning. During recent months he has not even been able to serve, as he did at first, as a brake on the more fantastic fiscal and economic policies of the Hitler regime. More and more, therefore, his position has become intolerable. But he had to continue serving, as long as he was needed, even if only as a front. A prisoner of the Third Reich while head of the Reichsbank he will continue to be a prisoner as minister without portfolio. The only difference is that his new cell is much less ornate than was his former one.

DR. SCHACHT'S position is tragic. But there is nothing he can do about it. In climbing on the Hitler bandwagon in the last days of the Weimar republic he was, as usual, pursuing his opportunistic star. For a time he occupied a position of power second only to that occupied by Hitler himself. He ruled in the economic and financial sphere as the Fuehrer did in the sphere of politics, and his ambitions even went very much further. But he now finds himself in the position of an architect whose paper plans have been put into effect and who, therefore, is thus no longer needed.

The house which Schacht built was like nothing ever seen before on sea or land. With a magician's skill he built it seemingly out of nothing. Germany is poor. Schacht made her poverty pay—for the time being, anyway. He made Germany's vast external indebtedness the basis of a trade expansion which has alarmed her trade rivals. He defied classical economics by keeping the mark stable—at least, within Germany—without a gold reserve of any dimensions. At the same time by a bewildering series of exchange maneuvers he managed to erect a highly flexible mark for foreign trade purposes that gave Germany many of the advantages of devaluation without some of the disadvantages.

IT IS FAIR to assume that without Schacht the Third Reich would be in a far more parlous state than it is. Lacking his ingenuity and grasp, those to whom Germany's fiscal machinery might have been entrusted could, very easily, have made a mess of it. Only through Schacht's endless strategems has it been possible for the Hitler government to avoid the dangers of an uncontrolled inflation which would have wrecked the government.

For better or worse the machinery for the control of German economy and German exchange, which Schacht helped to erect, is now in operation. It is possible to suspect that Schacht himself has his doubts about its future. Perhaps he is glad to get out from the driver's seat before it collapses.

It is no secret that he has long been anxious to free himself of the thankless burdens thrust upon him. And the political evolution of the Nazi regime, particularly its violent anti-Semitic policy, have not made Schacht's role any easier or added to his personal happiness. For all of his cynical opportunism, Schacht has not entirely divorced himself from humane considerations. Like countless other Germans he has been aghast at the brutality manifested by the regime. But the time has long since gone when he could do anything to prevent such manifestations from occurring or moderate them when they did occur.

LIKE von Papen, Hugenberg and other Nazi "fellow travelers" who gave their support to Hitler in the days when he was rising to power, Schacht finds that gratitude is an evenescent emotion.

Without Papen, there would have been no Hitler. Papen was the catalytic agent who united the Nazis and the court camarilla around Hindenburg. Papen today is, for all intents and purposes, a prisoner. He has never been permitted to take the post of ambassador to Turkey to which, after his recall from Vienna, he was ostensibly assigned. He is confined to his Rhineland castle with ample time to think of the days when his conspiratorial instincts were finding full play and when he hoped to make Hitler his puppet.

Without Hugenberg, it is also possible that there would have been no Hitler. Hugenberg brought to Hitler the indispensable support of the German Nationalists whose 8 per cent vote in the 1933 election gave the Nazis the majority they needed to smash the Weimar constitution. Hugenberg was rewarded by being made economics minister, a job later entrusted to Schacht. Where is Hugenbarg now? The numerous newspapers and periodicals he owned have all been gleichgeschaltet by the Nazi steamroller; his enterprises have been taken over by the regime; he himself has become a cipher.

THEN THERE was Gen von Blumberg, who lasted only until he made the cardinal mistake of marrying the wrong person. And now it is Schacht's turn, though be outlasted all the others. Schacht, too, thought he could ride the tiger. And he, too, has discovered that he had harbored an illusion. Hitler was only too glad to use the conservatives for all they were worth. But he has not hesitated to throw them on the scrap heap when their usefulness was over.

More and more, partly because of the easy victories gained in the international sphere and partly because of the growing economic difficulties within Germany herself, it is the Nazi radicals who are determining the Third Reich's policies. And these radicals have no more use for such bourgeois-minded wizards as Schacht than for such over-clever intriguers like Papen or stupid fools like Hugenberg. All of them have been thrown overboard, together with and individual rights.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Disemployed

EXCEPT as a symbolic gesture of distrust for the existing relief arrangements, the action of the House in reducing the deficiency appropriation for relief is of no importance. To save $150,000,000 in an expenditure of $9,500,000,000 brings us no nearer in fact, nor even in theory, to an enduring solution of the problem. It will do nothing for the national credit, nothing for the taxpayer, and it will probably inflict severe suffering and anxiety upon many thousands of families.

The fact of the matter is that as a Nation we do not fully understand the problem, and no one in public life really knows as yet what to do about it. This is just as true of Republicans as of Democrats, of New Dealers as of anti-New Dealers. All of us are groping. One has only to look at what the critics of the existing system say, taking every charge at its face value and accepting every proposed reform as feasible, to see that they are not venturing to challenge the essentials of the system. They complain about politics in relief, they would like to spend a little less money, they would like to decentralize the administration. For my own part I agree with these suggestions. But the essentials remain, and they do not recognize, much less cure, the real trouble.

THE ESSENTIALS which remain are, first, the acceptance as a fact that there is a permanent mass of unemployed; second, the opinion that the able-bodied unemployed must have work-relief rather than a dole; third, the conviction that much more than half the cost of relief must come out of Federal funds. Not all public men would subscribe flatly to all three propositions. But few, if any, I believe, will be found to challenge them when it comes to casting a vote for which they are publicly accountable.

We may ask ourselves, then, how far it is true that these three propositions will control any system which can be set up. Taking them in reverse order, it is, I think, certainly true that the lion's share of the cost of all relief is bound henceforth to come out of Federal funds. From January, 1933, to June, 1938, a period of 5½ years, the Nation spent $15,000,000,000 on relief, and of this total almost three-quarters came from the Federal Government. Not even the Byrnes committee hopes to cut the amount to two-thirds; no one that I know of is on record as thinking it could be cut to a half.

The reason is, I think, clear enough. The revenues of local and State governments are based primarily upon land, and in the past it has been the increase in the value of land which has provided them with increasing revenues. The expansion of local government has been financed out of the rising value of real estate brought about by the growth of population. Almost certainly this period has come to an end, what with the reduction in the birth rate and the stoppage of immigration. As a result government has had to turn from the taxation of land values to the taxation of incomes. But local government cannot tax incomes as effectively as it can tax land. For the factories and services which produce incomes will move away from cities and States to escape heavy taxation. Land cannot move away. Therefore, as the burden is placed on movable incomes instead of on immovable land, only the Federal Government can tax successfully. For the Federal tax collector is everywhere.

WHAT ARE WE to think about the proposition that there is a permanent mass of unemployed that nothing short of a great boom can temporarily absorb into private industry? We have to think, I am afraid, that in the prevailing economic philosophy of all responsible groups in America, a permanent mass of unemployed is, so to speak, ordained.

For all organized groups in American life, the farmers, the businessmen and the industrial wage workers are, it would appear, thoroughly converted to the idea that the price of the thing they sell must be "stabilized" at some desirable minimum. They want a "bottom" under their prices, "protection" against "chislers." To accomplish this the farmers use the tariff, compulsory or induced control of production, Government loans, subsidies, and the retirement of marginal lands; the businessmen use the tariff, various kinds of agreements, mergers, and other monopolistic devices; the wage workers use collective contracts, union rules against apprentices, wages and hours laws, and the rule that the prevailing hour wage must be paid on relief and on public works.

The total net result of this combined price fixing is to fix prices above the true market level—that is to say, above the level at which the demand for goods and services will buy the whole available supply. There is thus a permanent supply of labor and productive capacity which cannot be sold in the market. It is shut out of the market. It is composed of farmers who cannot make ends meet because what they are able to earn is not equal to the prices they have to pay for what they must buy; of potential businessmen who never become businessmen, or quickly fail, because they cannot make a profit at the existing costs of production; and, above all, of wage workers whom it is too expensive to employ at the existing level of wage rates.

There are, of course, ups and downs of employment due to the business cycle. But there is also a permanent pool of unemployed in good times and in bad, and this permanent unemployment is the direct consequence of the general national belief that all prices for goods and services must be stabilized.

THE COST of relief for the able-bodied unemployed is the charge the Nation has to pay for the parity price in agriculture, the stabilized price in industry, and the minimum prevailing wage rate in employment. If fixing these prices is a desirable form of protection, then permanent relief to what we ought to call the disemployed is the cost of that protection. The problem of permanent unemployment is insoluble, given the prevailing economic dogmas of the nation.

This brings us to the third proposition and raises the question of what kind of provision the nation ought to make for its disemployed. It cannot let them deteriorate in idleness with no more than a few groceries and a few bags of coal to keep them from perishing. No one who looks at the human realities will seriously propose to do that to able-bodied men and women. On the other hand the vice of work relief as now conducted is that it does not do enough to equip the workers for real employment. It does something. The CCC camps and the National Youth Administration do in part at least train some young men for eventual employment at the existing wage rates. But that is not done, I should think, for most of the WPA workers, not even for the 30 per cent of them who are under 35 years of age.

Yet surely the sound human approach to this problem would be to regard the young and ablebodies disemployed not as "relief cases, but as persons somehow handicapped, who need to be retrained and re-equipped for the struggle of life. They are not efficient enough to be profitably employed at prevailing wage rates. If the wage rates are to stay, then their efficiency must be raised or they must be supported at public expense.

IF THEY were being educated and disciplined for self-support, the country would, I believe, feel quite differently about the money that is being spent. For then there would be some prospect of solving the problem eventually; whereas today the kind of relief that most of them get makes it likely that they will always need relief. And that is the kind of spending which the people as a whole do not want fastened permanently upon them.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

On The Movies

Dear Editor:

Can you tell me where I can see a good movie? Or, what would be more to the point, can you tell me where I will not see a bad one? I give up, as things have reached a point where I am afraid to go into a picture house for fear it will be worse even than I had feared.

There was a time when a fan stood an even chance of running across a picture that had a little action, a fairly intelligent story and that made sense. At least the actors used to play the parts as if they believed in them. But today I'm always running up against screen plays in which even the actors act as if they were doing it to settle an election bet.

Just to cite three recent pictures, take "Paris Honeymoon," with Bing Crosby; "Zaza," with Claudette Colbert and Herbert Marshall, and (though we can't blame Hollywood for this one) "The Beachcomber," with Charlie Laughton. They tell me "Zaza" as a stage play used to make emotional wrecks of our mothers, but on the screen it had me hitting a new high in snoring. Even the elemental rule about making the heroine a sympathetic character was ignored in this one and the audience was asked to feel sorry when a cheap, vulgar hussy, who forced a French businessman into an affair with her, discovered he had a wife and child in Paris. As the screen play was written and directed, it had the audience rooting for the wife and child all the way and regretting "Zaza" had ever reached first base. And Herb Marshall played the part of the emotional Frenchman with all the fervor of a Scotch Presbyterian.

In "Paris Honeymoon" Hollywood gave us one of those oldtime Balkan musical comedy plots and then cast Bing Crosby in the role of a romantic, dashing hero. Bing played the part with all the gusto of a bored song plugger from Tin Pan Alley. He couldn't have saved the picture if he had been good. This one reached a new low for boresome cinema offerings, and you can get an idea of what has come to be accepted as Hollywood humor from the fact that the high comedy business in this picture had to do with facial convulsions.

What saddened me more than these, however, was Mr. Laughton in "The Beachcomber." Charles is a great actor and has done some wonderful pictures, but if he is a beachcomber I am a Chinese lithographer. With Charles presenting an overstuffed, oily and wholly comic beachcomber, the audience was asked to believe that the bathing beauties of a tropical isle found him their dream boy. And as if that wasn't enough, we were expected to take seriously the climax wherein he fell in love with and married a stern, frosty nuisance with eyes like Eddie Cantor. He even settled down back in Kent and ran a highly respectable barroom!

Then I saw "Jesse James" played by Tyrone Power, and it left me fearing an "Abraham Lincoln" played by Robert Taylor.

Any advice from you where to go to see a convincing picture with a convincing cast will be appreciated. Yours.

ELMER TWITCHELL.

Germany is short of doctors. So she is solving the problem by cutting the medical college course to two years instead of four. This is typically Nazi and gives Germany twice as many half-as-good doctors.

Colorful Days Of 1840's in Capitol's Film

'Stand Up and Fight' Stars Taylor, Beery; Excellent Stage Bill

"STAND UP AND FIGHT." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Forbes Parkhill, adapted to the screen by James M. Cain, Jane Murfin and Harvey Fergusson, co-starring Robert Taylor and Wallace Beery, with Florence Rice, Helen Broderick, Charles Bickford, Barton MacLane, Charley Grapewin, Robert Glecker, Clinton Rosemond, John Qualen, Claudia Morgan, Robert Middlemass and Jonathan Hale. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke II. Previewed Tuesday, January 17. At the Capitol Theater.

It is an encouraging portent to discover that the films have at last hit on a little-discussed period of American history from which to capture a thoroughly robust and romantic setting. To be sure, there have been earlier pictures of pioneer life and the Iron Horse, but it has been a long time since those full-blooded years shortly before the Compromise of 1850 have been screened. In "Stand Up and Fight," the new film at Loew's Capitol Theater, Robert Taylor and Wallace Beery bring to this potentially vital decade rough and roaring melodrama.

A particularly admirbale quality of the new film is that it is not content to attract the camera to only one phase of an unfamiliar period. It might, as other films have done, dramatize the decaying foundations of the Southern system, or the incessant surge west of a pioneer people, or the despicable methods of slave-running, or the imminent triumph of the Iron Horse. Instead, "Stand Up and Fight" blends all these contemporaneous affairs just as they are kaleidoscoped in history, into a credible and lively picture.

A Rowdy Robert Taylor

It is a rowdy Robert Taylor who plays the Baltimore County aristocrat, Blake Cantrell, at whose portico the hungry wolf is yapping. To his hunt he has asked the cream of the county, and then surprises them by auctioning off his estate. Susan Griffith and her tart Aunt Amanda are in the gathering, down from Boston, to look over their holdings in Cumberland. Down to his last prewar century note, Blake, with a letter for job-getting, takes the B. & O. iron horse for that Western frontier, but is passed on the way by the two women in the stage coach. The passengers get off and push the train. It develops the women own the stage coach line, which is managed for them by Capt. Starkey, none other than Wallace Beery. The railroad offers Cantrell work in finding proof that Starkey has involved the coach line in slave running, which will automatically break up the line and make it possible for the railroad to obtain its desirable right of way.

Meanwhile, Susan and her aunt are looking into the affairs of their company and are amazed to find Blake working off a jail sentence for Starkey on their own line. One of Blake's old slaves is captured by a slave-runner and Blake is set on avenging the old darky's death. He suspects Starkey of slave-running and builds a fine case for the railroad against the women's line.

Wild and exhaustive are the fights between Beery and Taylor. They each win one, Taylor getting smeared in the dirt and Beery in the snow. Taylor shows conclusively that he can take it in the bang-up brawls of this picture and Beery is his invariable gruff self. Florence Rice has little to do but be completely amazed at all the frontier rough stuff, as any self-respecting Bostonian of the period would, and for once in Helen Broderick's smart life, the gingery lady is wrong. She declares that that tea kettle on wheels is just another promotion scheme and that it can't last!

Stage Show Is Elaborate

The film does not have the only "stage" show at the Capitol this week. While the Capitol has boasted better vaudeville bills, the present one is more amusing than many. Those hard-working Chester Hale Capitol Comets are in their last week at the big theater and the two dozen of them step speedily in a tap version of "Liza," from the Gershwin "Show Girl," and several other numbers. The Eight Men of Manhattan are a singing octet whose msuic is pleasant, though not alarmingly rousing.

Stuart and Martin are the comics, and when they are clowning around they are far better off than when they are giving their impression of this or that. They have a zany style which yesterday afternoon's audience enjoyed. The Five Elgins are three men and two women who fling hats and tenpins around like fury. Just how, why or where or when they do this tossing makes for an amusing act. Johnny Barnes returns to his home town, tapping rhythmically.

Since "Stand Up and Fight" deals exclusively with Maryland, just as "Kentucky," further down the street, deals with the Blue Grass State, Orchestra Leader Phil Lampkin has arranged an overture from the score Sigmund Romberg wrote for "My Maryland." RICHARD L. COE.

At the Earle Theater.

BELL

In the dim recesses of that prim period known as the "Victorian era," the dramatic components of the play "Zaza," by Pierre Berton and Charles Simon, were deemed a bit on the side of daring and a possibly too-frank flaunting of the triangular difficulties apt to result from a surrender to the lures of "sex." The drama involved those familiar and completely reliable human elements of gaudy actress, tempted husband, patient wife and adorable child. Those ingredients of drama have been infallible in mass appeal through the years of fidelity to the playhouse of the many generations that have displayed an unwavering devotion to the theater. The universal scope of the cinema has necessitated some rearrangement of the vital elements of a play that may or may not have been a judicious selection for screen exploitation.

The film version of "Zaza," now on view at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater, is a handsome and a diverting entertainment. It is played with fine gusto by a cast that evidently entered whole-heartedly into the modernization of a story that was distinctly dated. There still attaches to the ancient work an aroma of antiquity. Its emotional approaches are impulsive, extreme and not always credible. But there remains, nevertheless, the groundwork of a drama that employed theatrical devices that cannot fail, even if somewhat emasculated and disguised, to arouse definitely favorable reactions in the easy susceptibilities of any audience.

A Sudden Infatuation

The locale of the action is provincial France, where a popular vaudeville team, Cascart and Zaza, achieve the minor triumphs that seem to point to an eventual success on the "big time" and in Paris. In the meantime, however, Dufresne, a gentleman of the upper social crust, falls desperately in love with Zaza and she with him. This impetuous infatuation temporarily disrupts the "team" that seems to be doing so well in its effort to attain eminence. Dufresne is pursuing a clandestine adventure, conscious of duties that lie elsewhere. Zaza merely is swept off her feet. Her partner is an innocent, disturbed and patient "bystander" and everybody but the two principally involved perceive the futility of an ill-fated love. These factors have been the basis of interesting drama since dissembling behind the footlights had its inception.

Impediments were encountered by those who attempted to imbue the celluloid version of "Zaza" with all of the piquant zest and atmospheric embellishment essential to the fullest exposition of its underlying theme and primary motivation. Long footages of the celebrated "can-can" dance, for example, were consigned to the cutting room floor as a concession to social well-being and the production code of the industry.

Out of all this, nevertheless, has emerged a film play, adapted to the screen by the eminent playwright, Zoe Akins, that fairly bubbles over with sprightly sequences and a sustained spontaneity that are impressive. Claudette Colbert, in the title role, turns in one of her most ingratiating and variegated performances. The very nature of the script makes some of her more ardent advances to the object of her affections seem a little crass and assertive, but this largely is offset by the fine restraint displayed by Herbert Marshall in "underplaying" the masculine role of major concern. One of the surprises of the picture is the admirable performance contributed by Bert Lahr as Cascart. Lahr, in this subject, becomes an actor as well as a low comedian and establishes himself as a mime of greater capacity than has heretofore been suspected.

Stage Perpetuates Atmosphere

There are many lesser roles that are played with skill by such recognized veterans as Genevieve Tobin, Helen Westley, Constance Collier, Walter Catlett, Ernest Cossart, Rex O'Malley and a host of others, but they are so subordinated to the pivotal interest centered in Miss Colbert, Mr. Marshall and Bert Lahr as to be unequivocally secondary and, in the large view, negligible.

George Cukor's direction is, as usual, swiftly paced and productive of unflagging interest in events which, otherwise, might seem less important than they are made to appear. The musical interpolations add further enlivenment of a film that has no dull moments.

The stage bill contrived by Harry Anger this week preserves the "Frenchy" implications of the major screen item. The engaging 16 Earl Roxyettes largely make up for the deficiency of "Zaza" by opening the stage proceedings with a "can-can" over which, happily, Mr. Will H. Hays had no jurisdiction. Andre Bordeaux sings songs in French, after the Maurice Chevalier manner, and the Four Ortons do some amazing things on the tight wire. Then there are Charles Kemper and his associate—"stooge" to you—George Haggerty, who reveal a fine flair for diversified comedy; the Kim Loo Sisters, a quartet of Celestials, who are singers, dancers and acrobats; Harris and Howell, with Zerita and Leon Cephas, in an interval of versatile nonsense, and the Roxyettes in a repetition of their astonishing maneuvers on stilts of varying heights—some of them very high indeed.

The Paramount News and Jo Lombardi's orchestral contributions complete a bill that met with high favor with yeserday's enthusiastic audiences.

The Team That Swayed the 'Halls'

CLAUDETTE COLBERT AND BERT LAHR as Zaza and Cascart, the vaudeville idols of France, in Paramount's picturization of the famous stage play of "Zaza," now on view as chief feature of the bill at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. Herbert Marshall plays the romantic lead opposite Miss Colbert and an impressive cast assumes the important duties falling to the associate principals in a play that has endured since the turn of the century

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 20.—Amusing hatter Lilly Dache, who launched the "Wimple," has gone tame for spring. Lilly says this year hats will drip with femininity and flirtatiousness, but no one will be able to control the kittenish capers of grandma when she copies her favorite debutante's hat and sets it on her own head.

HEDDA HOPPER

Lilly ordered four of Travis Banton's best costumes for her trip to Paris. And that is news. The other night at Marcal LaMaze, that popular night spot, she aired her new Chinese ring—a pointed thimble two inches long, which covers the nail and first knuckle of the pinkie finger, set solidly with rubies and diamonds. This brings the pinkie which grandmother used to crook over her teacup right back into the 1939 spotlight.

Lili Damita was there, too, and, as usual, the most stunning woman in the room. She wore Alix' black corset dress, the top bone exactly like Old Ironsides and hooked up the front like the old model. You remember them, girls, sure you do. We used them long before we caught that spare tire in the zipper. Her hat sat up like a cuff with blue and green veil cascading to the shoulders, like the caps worn by the Foreign Legionnaires. Mrs. Jack Warner went "Floradora Girl" with black and green ostrich feathers a foot high. Which gave her head a tilted-forward look. Lucky Dache didn't have a pair of scissors or I wouldn't have been able to restrain her.

Mrs. Darryl Zanuck, in white, was the life of her own party and why not, since they were celebrating their wedding anniversary? Geraldine Spreckles fell, or Joe Schenck pushed her. Anyway, they both landed right side up in the middle of the floor. Sylvia Fairbanks in the sheath of black velvet. Ever noticed what a lovely shaped head she has?

Gene Markey suffering from hiccoughs, asked the waiter to hit him. He did, a little pat. Gene said, "Go ahead, hit me." "You asked for it," replied the waiter as he hauled off and knocked the hiccoughs right out of Gene, who asked, "How would you like to come over to my house, and put on the gloves with me each morning?"

Screw-ball Marie Wilson went Spanish and wore a black lace mask over one eye. I asked if she was going "Long John Silver" or "Ferdie." "Ferdie who?" "Why, the bull." "Oh, I've never met him," said Marie.

Sally Rand's Nude Ranch is just about finished for the San Francisco Fair. The principal items of costume are a ten-gallon hat, a gun and boots.

'Sweethearts' Renews Its Run At Columbia

Opulent Technicolor Filmusical Costars Eddy and MacDonald

"Sweethearts," biggest movie amusement buy for months, moves into the Columbia this week. In lavishness, scope and beauty of production there's been nothing like it in musicals since "The Great Ziegfeld." And the Ziegfeld opus did not have the "Sweethearts" rainbow of Technicolor and Herbert music, not to mention moviedom's greatest singing pair, Jeannette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy.

In effect, "Sweethearts" is one of Hollywood's boldest boxoffice challenges. No expense has been spared in either cast or production to make it a triple A picture. It gives you a splendid session of light opera, a parade of rainbow spectacle not to be equaled in a stage revue, finally a movie story that is light, romantic and plentifully bedecked with comedy. Also, it is a picture with practically universal appeal. Music lovers, businessmen looking for a spot of relaxation, housewives tired from a shopping spree, high school girls—well, you can't name any types so diverse that they won't be alike in enjoying "Sweethearts."

Besides the unconquerable Eddy-MacDonald combination, the picture also is graced by such comedy stars as Frank Morgan, Mischa Auer and Herman Bing. As a producer who mingles guile and innocene in his efforts to stay on top of the heap, Morgan is practically irresistible. Auer and Bing are foils as a collaborating playwright and composer, both with overweening egos.

The world of backstage furnishes fourth the story of "Sweethearts." Nelson and Jeanette play stage stars who are also married lovers, also scions of famous theatrical families. Plumb worn down by professional and family demands, they bend an ear to the siren call of Hollywood. Their distracted producer (Morgan) assents to Mischa Auer's unmoral but ingenious scheme of setting the pair at odds, thus preventing the signing of a movie contract. Result, a champion case of jealousy bringing on a matrimonial smash-up. Incidentally, Jeannette MacDonald, as a green-eyed wife, tosses the most vivid of tantrums.

Brilliant bits of "Sweethearts" included La MacDonald as an incomparable mannequin trying on various Adrian creations, also a marvelous photomontage created by Slavko Volkapich for the purpose of reflecting the restless mental workings of Eddy and MacDonald, while separated.

The super-critical may note a certain diffuseness in "Sweethearts." It's perhaps a natural characteristic of the picture that it should illustrate a scatter-shot technique rather than a direct hit aim. But it shatters the target, at that.

Bob Benchley's "Mental Peace," showing Bob as a double-exposure psychoanalyst, heads a generous and entertaining group of added features. Another worth-while short shows the development of insulin by the famed Banting. The newsreel is chiefly notable for the shots of Justice Frankfurter declaring himself and his principles before the Congressional Committee.

Flower Scenes Boon to Hospital

Children's hospitals in and about Hollywood had a steady flow of flowers within a few days not long ago.

The "Paris Honeymoon" company was shooting in a Paris apartment with Shirley Ross and Bing Crosby.

The apartment was loaded with flowers which have to be replaced daily, as only natural flowers were used. The flowers changed so much overnight that it would have been impossible to match shots.

So fresh flowers were delivered daily, the other flowers going to hospitals.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Jan. 20.

THOMAS E. DEWEY: The representatives of Charles Harnett, the resigned commissioner of motor vehicles now under indictment by you, will ask your office to appoint two alienists to examine his sanity . . . F. D. R.: The American Labor Party, invited to send a delegate to the conference of democratic forces at Montevideo, will designate Luici Antonini . . . Stenographers' Union: Tommy Manville's secretary again has left him. And the newspapers have refused Tommy's newest full-page ads, which were to read: "Wanted—A Secretary—Not Romance."

POLICE COMMISSIONER VALENTINE: New York's "Perfect Crime," the Agnes Tufverson mystery case, may be nearer solution . . . Five years ago Capt. Ivan Poderjay, suspected of murdering her and disposing of her body—which never has been found—pleaded guilty to bigamy . . . Lyon Boston, then an assistant district attorney, was assigned to the case. Boston translated 1,200 of Poderjay's letters, and then told him: "This case seems to follow a certain pattern—one you probably read in a book. What's the book?" . . . "'Sonya,'" Poderjay confessed . . . Boston called Sumner, the anti-vice man, and they checked through all the censored books, without avail . . . Last week, however, a Milwaukee resident wrote to Boston and stated that he had the book. It's en route here now . . . And Poderjay is scheduled to be released this year.

AL MARINELLI: Your successor as Tammany district leader already has been selected. He's Italian and works in the Internal Revenue Department . . . Big Boy Williams: You're the leading prospect to portray the role of "Lennie" in the movie version of Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men." Steinbeck will write the screen play and the movie will be made in Monterey, the original setting.

J. EDGAR HOOVER: Before February 1 Mayor LaGuardia will appoint Dave Marcus of the Department of Collection to head the new Department of Investigation, which will be our local G-men bureau. Marcus twice has rejected appointments as a magistrate . . . John N. Garner: His friends in the Senate were about to publish the papers of former Senator Edward P. Costigan—who died Tuesday . . . Ernest Boyd: Your former wife, Madelaine Boyd, already is at work upon her next book. It will be called "Those Sad Boozy Days." It will be in praise of Horace Liveright, the late publisher, and will contain slaps at many of his colleague-detractors.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE: A customer at the Liveright Bookshop this week asked about copies of "The River," and stated that she didn't think our citizens were intelligent enough to want to buy it . . . "Well," said the salesgirl, "there's a man buying two copies" . . . "No wonder," the salesgirl was told. "That's Pare Lorentz. He wrote it."

GOVERNOR LEHMAN: If the Bronx Grand Judy had indicted Louis Greenfield, the mercy slayer of his son, for murder in the first degree, District Attorney Sam Foley was prepared to permit his release on bail—the first time in the history of the State . . . Beatrice Lillie: Congratulations. You're Public Comedienne No. 1 . . . Max Gordon: Billy Rose will use the "Franklin D. Roosevelt Jones" number—cast and all—from your production of "Sing Out the News" as part of his next Casa Manana show. Lillian Roth, the 3 Stooges and the Salici Puppets also will be featured there . . . Will Hays: Jack Oakie, who just shed 50 pounds, says that now he looks like a young Mickey Rooney."

WARREN K. BILLINGS: Last year the American artists congress commissioned Robert Berdicos to paint a mural portraying political imprisonment, depicting the plight of the Scottsboro boys, you and Tom Mooney . . . The mural was completed on January 6. The next day Berdicos had to start redoing it—because Mooney was released on January 7, and the mural's feature is the scene showing Tom Mooney resigned to a death in a California jail.

Metropolitan

"Paris Honeymoon," in its second week downtown at the Metropolitan Theater, has Bing Crosby getting involved pleasantly with two girls and crooning sleepily about various subjects and finally shaking off inertia sufficiently to select one of them to be his permanently.

In view of the stellar work he did in "Sing You Sinners," Mr. Crosby is a little below par in this newest vehicle of his. He is again burdened with the sentimental motif, which he can carry well enough but which he is definitely better without.

Shirley Ross and Franciska Gaal are the heart interests, and it is the latter who wins out, by being a problem girl who throws vases and in other ways endears herself to the man pursued. Miss Ross is the regal type who wears her hair up; perhaps the upswept hairdress will eliminate the screwball comedy girl type.

Bing sings, and right well. Edward Everett Horton butles. Ben Blue has too few moments as a cop. Akim Tamiroff is a small-time racketeer. And all of them perform their stunts against the backdrop of a mythical village some distance removed from Paris, and, as Mr. Tamiroff puts it, comprised of "80 miles of roses and a beautiful stink."

A Grantland Rice sports short has an entertaining bit about two boys and a dog and their adventures in the Far West with a candid camera.

Looney Tunes presents a beautiful burlesque of the Lone Ranger who aids Porky, the Pig, in saving some gold being transported gillopy-gallopy somewhere. g. S. S.

Poundage Creeps Up With Age

Gradualness the Big Peril Since the First Gains Escape Notice Vigilance Necessary

By Ida Jean Kain.

HOW MANY pounds of weight did you gain in 1938 . . . and how many will you gain in 1939? If you added only a couple of pounds last year, and only a pound or so the year before, you probably think the increase is not worth noticing. And you're right—unless these little gains are a definite trend!

That's the way the pounds sneak up on you. You can gain 4 pounds one year simply by taking half an average size pat of butter—about 50 calories—more than you need every day. Then if you grow a bit more careless in your food habits, the gain may jump to 6 or 8 pounds in a year's time, then to 17 pounds in the year.

At that rate you can see how easy it would be to gain 40 pounds over a period of five years. You could gain that much just by eating above your daily calorie requirements one pat of butter or one chocolate cream or any other portion of food amounting to 100 calories.

Gradualness the Danger

Once you become calorie-minded, you will be on the watch for these extra calories. No matter how slowly you begin to exceed your calorie requirements, they will finally add up to excess weight. When you have eaten 4,000 calories more than you need, you can look out! Sooner or later they will register on the scales as an extra pound of adipose tissue.

This gradual accumulation of weight is what makes it so difficult to combat obesity. If it happened overnight, you would be so alarmed that you would take steps to get rid of it at once. Unfortunately, it usually accumulates pound by pound over months and years, and you may even persuade yourself that it is only natural.

Overweight is not natural for anybody. Statistics show that a 10-pound gain over a 20-year period is the average—but, as you grow older you feel better and stand a chance of living longer with weight that is slightly under the average. So clamp down on your appetite the minute the scales start up. That's the only time it is easy to control your weight—at the beginning of a gain.

Easy—at Beginning

At this point, you may only need to substitute fresh fruit for rich desserts, take a little less gravy or other forms of fat, go without the between-meal calories and put a ban on the late snacks. You might try out the rule of always leaving the table while you still feel that you would enjoy eating a bit more. The chances are that 10 minutes later you will have forgotten all about food.

Improve Your Personality

UNHAPPY MOLLY! Too many evenings she sits alone with a book. What's wrong with such a nice-looking girl that she can't get her share of friends, admiration?

This is a competitive world—socially as otherwise—and to win in it a girl has to cultivate a dash of personality, traits that attract and get remembered.

A large order, you may think. It isn't. It's just giving your best traits a chance, doing away with faults that stifle them.

Perhaps you let yourself get overshadowed through a what's-the-use attitude. You may have a quiet humor of your own—but you can't be a wit like the belle of the crowd, so you sit silent.

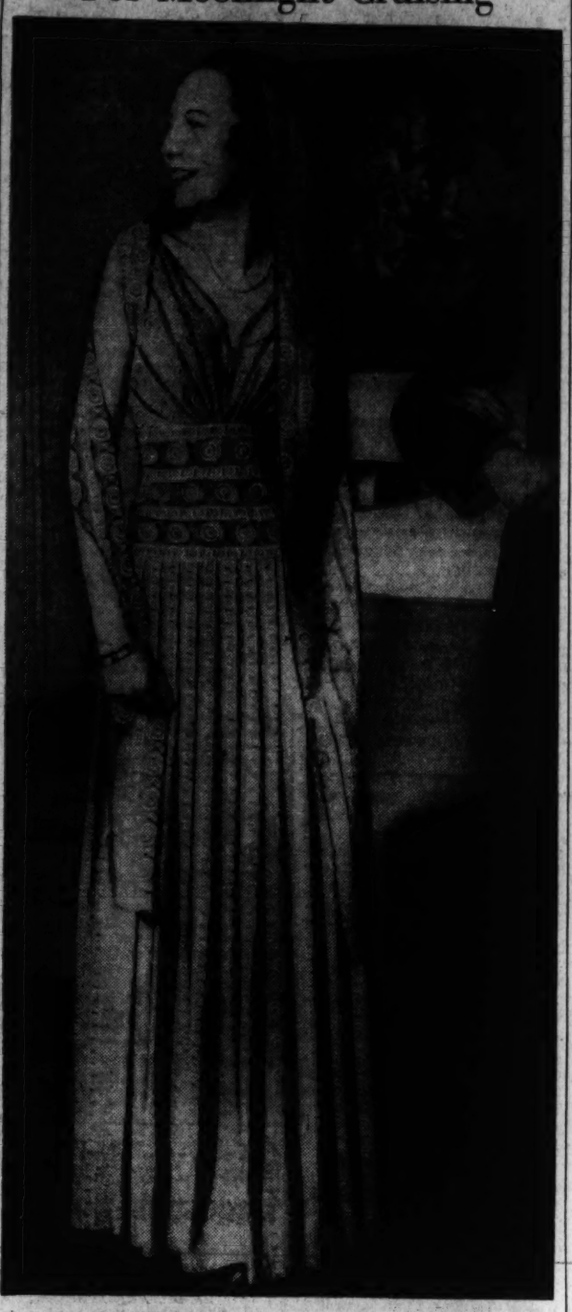
Snap out of it. Sharpen your own humor by reading the gayer magazines, plunge in the talk. You may be the next belle!

Down deep in your heart you may be really interested in people—warm-hearted, sympathetic. Do you get that across or does shyness make you seem cold, indifferent?

Not knowing yourself may be another reason your best points don't shine out. You may not realize how lovely your skin would look with certain colors. And for the same reason your worst points may ride triumphant. Unconscious nervous habits such as sniffing can irritate others unbearably.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Secrets of a Winning Personality," to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

For Moonlight Cruising



The evening print ensemble shown above is ideal for deck parties while cruising and will serve equally well for roof gardens later in the season. The matching scarf not only protects the coiffure but imparts a romantic aura to its wearer. Displayed at a recent fashion showing of cruise clothes, the outfit was noted for its simple slender lines, its graceful pleats and its low cut back. The fabric is of rayon and cotton with a light blue background.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

'Something Has Got To Be Done!'

President—Ladies, there are a number of very pressing problems before us today and as our time is very short, let us take these matters up at once. The first is traffic control.

Mrs. Bigger—Madame President, I move that we make the pedestrians obey the red lights.

Mrs. Poore—Just a minute, please. How would a pedestrian ever get across on a green light with all the motorists running over him on the turns? I think we ought to make the motorists behave.

Mrs. Doodle—I think both motorists and pedestrians need to be disciplined.

Mrs. Smiley—Madame President, just so that we will be perfectly fair in our stand and not cause any hard feelings, I move that we resolve to make the motorists respect each other's rights.

Mrs. Yeaman—Second the motion.

President—All in favor, say "aye."

Chorus—Aye.

President—The secretary will please send copies of the resolution to all the authorities and to the newspapers. Our next problem is juvenile crime. As you know the situation is very serious——

Mrs. Puffer—Madame President, I just want to say that I think the youth of this generation is as moral as it ever was. Now I know a lot of young people. I've always loved young people——

Mrs. Flint—I rise to a point of order.

President—Has anyone a motion?

Mrs. Pry—Just a minute. I want to say that I'm a friend of youth, but just the same I've seen some things that ought to be corrected.

Mrs. Noble—The whole thing is that the parents are to blame.

Chorus—That's right!

Mrs. Featherton—I move that we go on record to that effect and that we also appoint a committee to do something about the parents.

Mrs. Yeaman—Second the motion.

Chorus—Aye.

President—The secretary will please send copies of the resolution to the proper authorities—and of course to the press. Now let's see, what is our next matter of business? . . . Oh, yes, taxes.

Mrs. Bigger—Madame President, I just want to say that if something isn't done about the tax situation, we'll all of us be in the poorhouse. It's all this relief.

Mrs. Poor—Well, you can't let people starve.

Mrs. Bigger—Let 'em get out and get jobs.

Mrs. Smiley—Ladies, don't you really think that if we appealed in a nice way to the employers to hire more men it might do some good?

Mrs. Joyner—I move that we go on record as making a public appeal to the employers—

Mrs. Yeaman—Second the motion.

Mrs. Joyner—And that we also reaffirm our stand aganist any increase in taxes.

Mrs. Yeaman—Second the motion.

Chorus—Aye.

President—The secretary will please send copies of the resolution to all the employers, to all members of Congress and, of course, to all the newspapers. Now what is our next business?

Mrs. Gink—Madame President, I think we ought to do something right away about noise. I know lots of nights I'm awakened at all hours——

Mrs. Nitter—It's the people in automobiles. They honk in front of my house——

Mrs. Bigger—It's these milk wagons.

President—Ladies, we have only three more minutes. Is there a motion?

Mrs. Featherton—Madame President, I move that we protest to whoever we ought to protest about the noise.

Mrs. Yeaman—Second the motion.

President—All in favor say "Aye."

Chorus—Aye.

President—The secretary will please send copies of the resolution to—well, the proper authorities, and to the newspapers. Now our time is about up——

Mrs. Lightcap—Just a minute! I don't think we ought to adjourn without doing something about the French-Italian stiuation. We cannot permit another war to break out——

Mrs. Close—This country should stay home and mind its own business.

Mrs. Smiley—Madame President, may I suggest that we write a nice letter to Mussolini——

Mrs. Flagg—We need to build more battleships.

Mrs. Goofer—Madame President, I move that we settle this matter by reaffirming our stand for world peace—without mentioning anybody.

Mrs. Yeaman—Second the motion.

Chorus—Aye.

President—The secretary will please send copies of the resolution to all the authorities, both here and in Europe, and of course to the press.

Mrs. Doodle—May I suggest that we include the European newspapers?

President—A good idea! ALL the newspapers, here and abroad.

Parties for Skaters

Most skaters this year wear panties that match their skirts exactly and flexible foundation girdles with detachable garters so that they may attach long stockings to them. Some of these are silk and others wool. There are also wool tights for those who feel the need of extra warmth.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Distressed by Deportment of Many of Her Classmates, Whom She Calls "Common," Girl Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Fourteen is an early age to have to be writing to someone for advice, but I'm afraid I need it badly. Ever since I entered junior high school I have been unable to "get" a single girl friend. Before, I had a lovely girl friend, one whom I would have done almost anything for, but as she is two grades ahead of me I didn't know how she acted at school. I soon learned that she used profanity and although she is actually "common" at school, she is her own sweet self at home. In other words, she does things without her parents' knowledge.

After finding this out, I completely lost faith in her and, naturally, she is no longer a good friend of mine. I made it a point, on entering junior high school, not to associate with any such girls. Fifty per cent of the girls in my class are just like her and I find it difficult to discover a worthwhile girl friend. I know several nice girls who belong to my church and one of them lives quite near me, but none of them go to my school and I am really lonesome. Not so much on school days as on Saturdays and Sundays, when I have nothing to do.

I forgot to say that I have another girl friend, who lives just across the street, but she, apparently, doesn't like my company, as we seldom go anywhere together. Maybe I have the wrong idea about my former girl friend. Another thing—I am popular with boys, very. Those I know have told me that the only reason my "former girl friend" is so nasty to me is because she's just a little jealous of some of the boys who come to the house.

Believe me, Miss Haworth, it's much easier for me to entertain a boy at home, playing games or something, than it is to entertain a girl. Is there something wrong with me? What on earth can I do to get the companionship of girls my own age. Please advise me soon.

LONESOME GIRL.

Action Vs. Attitude

DEAR L. G.: There is one outstanding contradiction in your story, as it stands, which leads me to believe you haven't told the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth—as you yourself see it—pertaining to the causative factors of the alleged boycott imposed upon you by schoolmates of your own sex. In the first and second paragraphs of your petition, you assume responsibility—in rather self-righteously defensive, explanatory phrase—for breaking off close friendly relations with your erstwhile girl chum and for standing aloof from all others of her kind.

Yet in the third paragraph you turn a searchlight of another color on the problem, tack back from an entirely different angle, by saying: "—the only reason why my 'former girl friend' is so nasty to me is because, etc.—" Such confused, confusing and contradictory shifts of viewpoint cause one to wonder if the whole problem as it exists in your mind isn't, perhaps, a case of much ado about nothing. One wonders if this isn't just one more instance of the adolescent ego—just recently having become sharply self-aware—determinedly creating for itself an imaginary melodrama of conflict between its supposedly uniquely different and superior self and the rank and file of duller, coarser, less distinctive and more clod-like mortals.

An acquaintance of mine whose vocational specialty has to do with directing the activities—individual and collective—of high school and junior high school-age boys and girls, who is an authority in the field of social and personality problems of adolescents, tells me that never a day passes but some youngster comes to her with a woeful complaint to the effect that, "Nobody loves me." That, indeed, such grievances are riotously commonplace, running into the dozens if not the scores every week of the school term.

In her opinion, this complaint is symptomatic of an overweening desire on the part of the complainant to focus the spotlight of associational attention upon himself. She sees the grumbler, in most cases, as a rather obstreperous egotist who (to use her words), "needs a good dose of ignoring," on the part of contemporary associates as well as educational mentors, if he is ever to win the recognition he craves by valid and meritorious means. "To pay much attention to the youngster in that state of mind is to encourage him in taking a wrong track, rather than to help him," she remarks.

"He rather enjoys feeling sorry for himself; he wants the limelight without being willing to make a proper effort to obtain it; he loves seeing himself and his problems in print; answer him and he'll clip the answer and carry it around for months, displaying it to his friends," she says. If she seems rather forbiddingly cold to the proposition of giving lushly sentimental consideration to this particular type of adolescent lament, it is because she sincerely believes that the modern educational set-up provides at least adequate opportunities for the release of students' social inclinations; "opportunities," as she says, "which the student should cultivate because they are far better for him than the vicarious outlet of bemoaning his plight."

She suggests that the social salvation of a school girl in your alleged predicament will be found in entering wholeheartedly into such group activities as the school provides and sponsors—cultural, recreational or athletic activities designed to develop a co-operative spirit of give-and-take, of teamwork and cheerfully unself-conscious fair play, in the individual personality. She thinks the person who studiously holds himself aloof from the group projects and interests of his contemporaries both invites and deserves a penalizing measure of popularity.

Eventually you will discover, if you have not already observed, that the world is inclined to forgive, even indulgently to admire, the most punctiliously high minded foibles and idiosyncrasies of those persons—in high school, in college, or in adult spheres of existence—who bring a willing shoulder to the wheel of a wide variety of contemporary enterprises. I do not recommend that you relinquish your fastidious standards of deportment. Far from it. But I do admonish you not to make the equal and opposite mistake of adopting a "holier-than-thou" attitude toward your feminine associates. Try to be a little less self-conscious about your virtues and distinctive differences; get into the thick of things around your school, and prove the theoretical superiority of your personal attributes by action rather than by attitude. Thus engaged, you will not only have no time to be lonesome, but you will find popularity creeping upon you unaware.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Keep Moving, Doctor Advises, If You Get Cold and Numb

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

January 20 is the date of the largest number of colds. It is also the date of the lowest temperature in the United States. So there is a reason for calling colds, "colds."

The incidence of colds is lowest from June 20 to July 28. It begins to rise sharply about September 10. There is another sharp rise in the last week in November, and this rise reaches its peak January 20. Then there is a gradual and steady fall. March 17 shows about as many colds as November 25. A drop of 10 degrees increases the incidence of colds nearly 1 per cent.

These figures were compiled year after year by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., using its employes and their absence days on account of colds as a basis.

There is one other important factor in catching cold—age. The largest number of colds occurs in those under 4 years of age—2,400 in a group studied. The rate falls steadily until it reaches 1,000 at the ages of 15 to 24. Then, for some reason, it rises again to 1,500 at 35, and then falls steadily, so that people at the age of 55 are practically free from colds.

Both these sets of figures have some significance. Cold weather and especially cold damp weather conditions unquestionably play some part in the tendency to catch cold. Just what the mechanism is cannot be agreed on by all students of the question. Perhaps the best explanation is that based on the experiments of Drs. Taylor and Dyrenforth, of Jacksonville, Fla., as detailed in this column a few weeks ago.

Their experiments showed that cold water reduces bodily temperatures more rapidly than cold air, thus lowering resistance. Here the factor of getting wet is explained.

Loss of body heat produces definite changes in the membrane of the nose. There is blanching and reduction of blood supply. The temperature of the inside of the nose may go down as much as 10 degrees when the body is exposed to cold. Certainly these changes lower the resistance of the membrane to infection and make entrance of the virus of the common cold easy.

The white cells of the blood are also reduced on exposure to cold. These are the cells which fight infections of all kinds.

It is worth noting that exercise while exposed to cold does not produce these changes. So that if you have to get cold and wet these days, keep moving around.

All these data support the old-fashioned ideas about keeping bundled up this weather. It is an especially good plan to wear heavy socks or stockings.

A Woman's New York

by Alice Hughes

New York, Jan. 20.

NOW THAT the beautiful bangtails are galloping at the beautiful winter tracks in Florida, California and Louisiana, I am interested to learn that there will be several newcomers on the already large list of ladies who preside over racing stables.

ALICE HUGHES

Of courses, the famous ladies of the turf will still occupy the spotlight. Mrs. Payne Whitney will have her large, costly and successful string at all the big tracks, and so will Mrs. Henry Carnegie Phipps, whose aggregation of sprinters is known as the Wheatley Stables. And of course there is the beautiful Mrs. Dodge Sloane, whose interest in her horses has never wavered in spite of a thin season or two, and Mrs. E. Graham Lewis will race some steeds, too. You may know her better as Elizabeth Arden.

I hear that among the newcomers will be Miss Henrietta Bingham, daughter of the late Ambassador to England, and that some of her horses will first show her colors at the Saratoga meeting come next August. Miss Bingham is said to have several thoroughbreds already in training on the family farm in Kentucky. I also learn that Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, widow of the admiral, is going to continue her late husband's interest in the sport. No truer lover of fine horse flesh ever lived in this country than the late Admiral Grayson.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: Try this on your girls who are about to battle the midyear examinations. Dean Gildersleeve, of our Barnard College at Columbia, sounded off some words of warning to the freshman girls the other day. "Avoid the fashionable college pose of cramming the night before an exam with the aid of wet towels and strong coffee," said the dean. "A good sleep the night before the ordeal is much more important. And never shed a tear over a mark to get sympathy from men professors. It is not playing the game. I understand that Victorian fashions are coming back. I hope fainting and weeping will not be among them." Okay, dean! How about it, girls?

It is always a pleasure to be able to point out the happiness of a marriage for which disaster was predicted from the very first. That is why we all enjoy congratulating Irving Berlin and Ellin Mackay on the thirteenth anniversary of their wedding. Now Irving and Ellin are going to have a new country home on a 62-acre tract near Monticello, N. Y. That will, no doubt, be for the time when Irving wearies of writing his gay tunes for stage and screen, and settles down with Ellin in the sunset.

Speaking of weddings, we had a romantic honey here the other day when Bonnie Bee Berryhill, a 19-year-old Indian girl from Oklahoma University, said the fateful words with Arthur Ocheltree, a concert and opera tenor. They met when he was touring Oklahoma, and now they are off on the first boat for a honeymoon on Lake Como, reported by thousands to be the world's prize spot for lovebirds.

2 Dances to Enliven The Social Week-End

One Will Be at Sulgrave Club Tonight, The Other to Be Given Tomorrow by Polish Envoy; Several Cocktail Parties Slated

With two dances and half a dozen cocktail parties scheduled for today and tomorrow, this week-end should be one of the gayest of the Washington season.

The last of the "Three Dances" will be held tonight at the Sulgrave Club. Many are here from out of town for this event and for the dinner dance which the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, will give tomorrow night at the embassy to celebrate his birthday.

Being enthusiastically welcomed back to Washington for the week-end are Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dewey, who maintain a residence here but who this year took an apartment in New York. They have been prominent members of the smart scene in Manhattan, as they were in Washington. Last night the Deweys were honored at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. C. Mathews Dick, and tomorrow they will be feted at the cocktail hour by Mr. and Mrs. S. Kent Legare.

Auchinclosses Will Be Feted

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Auchincloss, who are week-end guests of Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, will be honored by her at a dinner tonight and at a cocktail party to be given tomorrow by Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss. Mrs. Gordon Auchincloss is a daughter of the late Col. Edward House, and her daughter, Louise, is the wife of Mrs. Robbins' son, Hutchinson.

Countess Bernstorff, whose husband is a son of the former German Ambassador here, and Baron and Baroness d'Epremesnil, of Upperville, are other out-of-towners here for the week-end festivities.

No end of social notables will arrive in time for the dance which the Polish Ambassador will give tomorrow. Among them is Baroness Rothschild, the former Kitty Spottswood, of Philadelphia, who is paying a visit to her native land for the first time in 20 years. She and the baron, it will be remembered, were hosts to the Duke of Windsor when he left England.

Mrs. Forbes Morgan is also coming down from New York for the party. As the wife of the late Mr. Morgan, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, and the daughter of Robert Jackson, who was secretary of the committee. Mrs. Morgan played a leading role in Capital society until the death of her husband over a year ago.

Many Arriving From Hunt Country

Many from the hunt country will come to Washington for the envoy's dance. Among them will be Mr. and Mrs. George Sloane, Mrs. John Hay Whitney, Raymond Guest and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mellon.

Simon Elwes, the portrait painter, will come from New York for the party. He was in Washington earlier in the winter to do a portrait of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, at which time he was entertained by Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean and other social notables.

Mrs. Sterling Hammond, a famous young beauty and former wife of Ogden Hammond, jr., will come from New York for the party. Countess Felicia Gizycka, who has an apartment in Manhattan this winter, is also expected to be among the guests.

Last evening the genial Ambassador was honor guest at the annual Night in Poland Ball given by the Kosciuszko Foundation in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. Count Potocki was honorary chairman and a patron of the event.

Thomas J. Watson, a member of the foundation's board of trustees, feted the envoy at a dinner before the ball at the home which he and Mrs. Watson maintain at 778 Park avenue. Sylvester Gruszka, Polish Consul General in New York, and Mrs. Gruszka were also honor guests at the dinner.

The ball depicted the snow-capped peaks of the High Tatras of southwestern Poland. Murals to depict the mountains were executed by former Kosciuszko Foundation art scholarship winners, a..d the room rang with the folk songs, dances and music, including bagpipes, reeds and violins of the Polish "Gorals," the Tatra mountaineers. Highlight of the program was when a man impersonating King Jan Sobieski of Poland, hero of the Battle of Vienna, which, in 1683, saved Europe from Turkish invaders, rode into the ballroom on a white steed, escorted by a grand marshal and victorious hussars in armor.

Federation Board Backs U. S. Health Program

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

A resolution indorsing the national health program and urging favorable consideration by Congress of legislation on four provisions was passed last night by the board of the General Federation of Women's Clubs following a symposium on welfare, at the closing session in the Mayflower Hotel.

The action of the federation board was taken on the advice of the advisory board on public health and child welfare and followed an address by Dr. Thomas Parran, jr., surgeon general of the United States Public Health Service, who is chairman of the advisory group.

The provisions specified were "extension of public health, maternal and child health services; expansion of hospital, clinic and other institutional facilities; provision of medical services for needy persons, and development of general programs of medical care by individual states, according to their respective needs."

This was passed as an emergency resolution, and will be appended to the call for the council meeting next May in San Francisco, to give opportunity for a referendum by states, Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, federation president, explained.

Dr. Parran characterized the National Health program as "buying feed for a young colt instead of paying for a dead horse."

"The program is not designed to federalize the practice of medicine, said Dr. Parran, "nor for the regimentation of its practice, but to socialize some of the costs. It will not bring about any basic change in the traditional methods of the practice of medicine in this country."

He attributed most of the opposition to the plan to misunderstanding of it.

Dr. Martha Eliot Is on Program

Oothers who spoke were Dr. Martha M. Eliot, assistant chief of the Children's Bureau, who declared that a maternal and child health program, to be effective, must be placed in the health program of the whole country. Dr. Beatrice McConnell, director of the industrial division of the Children's Bureau, asserted that hand an hand with protection of children goes necessity for education to appeal to the motor-minded child. Mrs. Elmwood Street, chairman of the National Council of Mothers and Babies, also spoke.

Mrs. Edward Bevens, of Arkansas, chairman of the Department of Public Welfare for the federation, presided at the symposium and introduced the division chairmen of her department: Mrs. J. W. Velvin, of Arkansas, chairman of community service; Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, of Washington, former president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs, chairman of Indian welfare, and Mrs. Margaret Walls Wood, of Illinois, chairman of health.

At the afternoon session, the federation passed a resolution "indorsing the principle of exibility of administration assured by the Constitution" and recommending to its member clubs that proposed legislation be examined with this in view. Mrs. Frederic Beggs, chairman of international relations, explained that, with other governments in a position to take an immediate stand in an international crisis, a democracy is weakened if it cannot also act quickly.

Urge Check on Growing Intolerance

Another resolution from the International Relations Department commended the Government for participation in the inter-governmental committee for political refugees and urged member clubs to work to check growth of intolerance and religious discrimination.

Mrs. F. H. Clausen's department of American Citizenship presented a resolution which was passed at the close of last night's session urging co-operation of women's clubs with the youth of their communities in order to "strengthen their faith in democracy."

It was voted to hold the 1940 council meeting in Milwaukee and the triennial convention in 1941 in Atlantic City.

Francis L. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, told board members at the morning session that if the United States does not pull down trade barriers, the danger of world war will increase. He called the reciprocal trade trestles foundations on which peace can be built.

Mrs. John Whitehurst, of Baltimore, national vice president, urged the women to lead a campaign to find out what women have accomplished in the past 50 years in preparation for the Federation's golden jubilee celebration in 1941, which will have the keynote, "Women, What Next?"

Mrs. J. Ralston Wells, of Daytona Beach, was elected president of the federation's Council of State Presidents. Other officers chosen were Mrs. W. T. Bruckner, of Hinsdale, Ill., vice president, and Mrs. Joseph M. Perkins, of Eastland, Tex., secretary-treasurer.

Mrs. David S. Long, of Harrisonville, Mo., chairman of the federation's junior club women, told board members that her program for the next three years would include study of the problems of uniform marriage and divorce laws, anti-narcotic legislation and a building up of churches in various communities.

Rural Youth Parley Topic

A rural urban Institute on the theme, "Youth Comes to the City," will be conducted next Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Mayflower Hotel, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Latham Hatcher, of Richmond, Va., and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, national and Washington branch presidents of the Alliance for Guidance of Rural Youth.

Seventy-five leaders from national and local, public and private agencies will meet to discuss problems concerned with the migration of rural and small town youth to the city.

Mrs. Roosevelt will preside at a dinner meeting Thursday at the Mayflower, at which Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, and Dr. John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education, will speak on "Rural Youth as a National Asset."

Friday Dr. Charles H. Judd, of the National Youth Administration, will speak on problems and trends in rural education at a luncheon session at the Mayflower. Mrs. Katherine M. Cook, president of the Rural Department of the National Education Association, will preside. That afternoon, Dr. Floyd W. Reeves, chairman of the President's advisory committee on education, will preside at a consultative session on improsing rural conditions.

Commenting on this conference, Mrs. Doyle, who is also president of the District of Columbia Board of Education, declared that young people from rural areas and small towns seeking better opportunities for themselves in cities, are often handicaped by their lack of knowledge of city living

"Frequently their own educational backgrounds are inadequate to equip them for successful life in urban communities," she said. "I believe that it is important for any city to devlop a community interest in rural youth. What should and what can a city offer these rural young people who have already left their homes and come to the city? How can we approach the problems of better education and training in rural areas so that fewer of these young people will need to come to the city for these and those who come wil lnot face such serious handicaps when they try to adjust themselves to city living? Is it possible to open to some of them new opportunities in their own communities so that more of them may find satisfactory living in rural environments?

O'Conor Asks Data on Deal With Railway

State's Purchase Of W. B. & A. Rights For Roadbed Has 'Joker,' He Hints

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Jan. 20.—Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor dove into the involved State Roads Commission report today and came up with a demand for immediate explanation of the commission's purchase of the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railway right-of-way.

O'Conor expected to receive all contracts, minutes of commission meetings and engineering data bearing on the deal tomorrow.

O'Conor said he had not completed his study of the six-page report, jam-packed with columns of figures, but felt it imperative to inquire into the right-of-way deal, which he said was to have been consummated tomorrow.

Priced at $80,000

The commission December 21 announced purchase of the right-of-way, unused by the railroad for five years, as the site of a major Annapolis-Washington road link. The price was set at $80,000.

O'Conor said he gained the impression at a January 18 conference with the commission that the 39-mile right-of-way was to be conveyed to the State in fee simple. Now he has been informed the deal is not outright transfer of title but consists in part of easements across property not owned by the railway.

Some of the easements, he indicated, carry reversionary clauses limiting use of the land to common carrier purposes, which might prevent its utilization as a highway.

Beall Defends Move

J. Glenn Beall, chairman of the holdover roads commission, defended the purchase, stating it was an economical move. Grading a similar roadbed would cost between $6,000 and $7,000 a mile, he said. Beall admitted that not all the right-of-way was held in fee simple.

Beall said he had forwarded all the requested data to O'Conor, and that it should reach the Governor early tomorrow.

O'Conor also said the engineering feasibility of the purchase would be examined, and to that end asked all engineering data which governed the commission in making the deal.

O'Conor said he must wait to see the contracts before deciding whether the commitment to purchase the roadbed is binding on the State. The fiscal statement of the commission lists the purchase as a contingent expenditure which "must" be paid.

12 Counties in Red

O'Conor found the estimated $17,737,397 income of the commission for the fiscal year ending next September 30 was "mortgaged" to the extent of $12,190,422 in unpaid encumbrances.

The report showed 12 of the 23 counties in the State would be overdrawn in amounts from $1,900 to $65,000 by September 30, for a total estimated overdraft of $159,182.

The remaining counties had an aggregate credit of $455,132 in the lateral gas tax and county bonding fund.

Probable revenue for this account was set at $2,299,210, more than balanced by liabilities of $2,454,040.

Medical Groups Argue Motion in Court Monday

Begin Open Defense Of Conspiracy Charge; Garfield Admits 2

"Organized medicine's" counsel will begin their first defense in open court against the Government's criminal conspiracy prosecution at 10 o'clock Monday morning. Justice Proctor, of District Court, assigned the time for argument of a motion yesterday.

The nature of the motion was not announced, but it was understood that attorneys for the Amrican Medical Association, the District Medical Society and 21 noted physicians who wer indicted of plotting against Group Health Association, Inc., were prepared to attack the legality of the charges.

Meanwhile, GHA, yesterday denied vigorously in the Court of Appeals that its activities amount to selling insurance. Attorneys E. K. Neumann, Hemer H. Rice and A. Blaine York filed a brief against the appeal of J. Balch Moor, District insurance superintendent, who claims the association is subject to his supervision. The District Court ordered Moor to let GHA alone.

2 More Admitted to Garfield

The G. H. A. brief quoted authorities which said "a contract entitling certificate holders to medical services or supplies at free or reduced rates . . . is not one of insurance."

Garfield Hospital yesterday extended courtesy privileges to two more doctors of the staff of Group Health Association, bringing the total to five.

The new G. . A. members admitted to practice in Garfield are Drs. Charles Albright and Russell F. Cahoon, general practitioners. Recently admitted were Dr. Clark P. Halstead, assistant surgeon; Dr. Roy A. Boe, eye specialist, and Dr. Richard H. Price, general internist, whose resignation from G. H. A. is effective January 31.

Denied Connection

First of the District hospitals to extend privileges to Group Health physicians, Garfield officials have denied the action had anything to do with the fight between Group Health and the District Medical Society. Recently Garfield officials declared the hospital never did have a grievance against G. H. A.

Among the charges in the "organized medicine" case is one of conspiracy to restrain the trade of G. H. A., its physicians and members, Washington hospitals, and doctors in violation of the Sherman antitrust act and coercion of hospitals by threats of loss of standing. The hospitals are not accused in the indictment.

G. H. A. leaders expressed gratification at Garfield Hospital's action. G. H. A./ physicians have made courtesy applications with other hospitals here, but that no stand had been taken as yet.

George P. Hoover, who has represented the District Medical Society, withdrew yesterday from counsel for three Washington physicians named in the indictment.

Tattoo Artist Finds Women Change Minds Too Often

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 20.—There are various ways of spending hours that drag wearily in hospitals, and C. Glen Meredith, 61-year-old tattoo artist, of Madison Heights, near Lynchburg, a patient at the University of Virginia Hospital, finds time passes more swiftly while employing his talents.

Admitted Tuesday for removal of a cataract, he has attracted much attention to his bed out in a hall where he sits sketching anchors, stars and ships. Several nurses, who pause in their round of duties to view his art, have requested sketches.

The seaman-artist says he has "decorated" approximately 2,000 persons, among whom are 228 women in the past two years.

Women customers, though quite firm in their choice for designs, change their minds quickly, he said. Inevitably choosing a design of two hearts joined with a man's intials encased, they return in a few weeks or months and furiously demand that the initials be blotted out, following a "falling out" with their boy friends.

Men, he said, don't seem to care if they are carrying initials of ladies who have lost their favor.. They never have the letters erased, but rather add new sets.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

The Washington National Ballet (Lisa Gardiner, director) presents the first of a series of intimate ballet evenings, "Fridays and Saturdays at Nine," in the King-Smith Playhouse Friday night. Program: Souvenir (music by Delibes and Chopin), Danse Macabre (music by Saint-Saens), Valse Nobles et Sentimentales (music by Ravel), Melodrama (music by Dorohty Radde Emery).

Hopeful of growth and glory, the Washington National Ballet made its debut last evening with the first of a series of intimate programs which are to be presented monthly through April. Intimate these entertainments have to be, for they are staged in the cozy King-Smith Playhouse where spectators and dancers are not separated by the spaces of illusion. The friendliness of the assemblage at the premiere was not the only auspicious omen; the excellence of the choreography by Lisa Gardiner and the smoothness of the performance augured well for the future.

The opening ballet, "Souvenir," arranged to music by Delibes and Chopin, has been offered before by Miss Gardiner, but its charm warranted the repetition. Wearied by teaching tourness and arabesques, a retired ballet dancer falls into a reverie wherein she sees herself as she was in her prime, and the vision restores her confidence. The roles of old dancer, the child prodigy, the proud mother and the dream dancer were taken by Alice Louise Hunter, Fillis Cole, Louise Hawthorne and Mary Day.

Saint-Saens' familiar "Danse Macabre" was treated to a visualization which suggested in costuming and action a scene from Boccaccio. A group of young people, who have fled from a plague-stricken city, take refuge in an old castle. As they pass the time in dancing, they are suddenly aware that they have been joined by a grim master of ceremonies whose name is Death.

Ravel's "Valses Nobles et Sentimentales," frequently used as ballet material, have never been so charmingly handled as in Miss Gardiner's choreography. The setting and costumes are Greek in the classical mode, and the episodes have been admirably designed in the details of patterned movement.

Several members of the Washington Composers' Club are collaborating with Miss Gardiner by writing new ballets for this series. The honor of being first fell last evening to Dorothy Radde Emery, whose "Melodrama" is a delightful burlesque of the old 10-20-30 plays of the nineties, complete with heroine, villain, feminine troublemaker and bashful hero. The music is clever in characterization and suggestion. The principal roles were danced by Christine Stewart, Irmanelle Correll, Larry Leonard, Marjorie Mitchell, Jack Baker, Alice Louise Hunter and Frank Stewart.

40 Md. Clubs Disapprove Wildlife Plan

Abolition of State Conservation Body Called Taxation Sans Representation

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 20.—Protesting proposed abolition of Maryland's present State conservation commission, 40 clubs of the Western Maryland Outdoor Life Federation declared today it would amount to "taxation without representation."

Their protest was embodied in a telegram sent to Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor at Annapolis by Executive Secretary J. Wesley Kelley, of the federation.

The Bowman commission appointed by Gov. O'Conor to examine the organization of Maryland's government, recently recommended that the conservation commission be eliminated and its functions incorporated in a new department of natural resources.

"We recognize the superior intellect and sincere efforts of the Bowman committee," said Kelley's telegram, "but believe the committee was pressed for time and lacked the first-hand information to enable it to develop a practical plan.

"The Bowman plan is undemocratic and theoretical. Forty clubs in Allegany, Garrett and Washington counties, comprising the Western Outdoor Life Federation, oppose the fundamentals and the given details of the Bowman commission recommendation for reorganizing the conservation commission."

The communication urged that O'Conor give his attention to principles of "the modern game law" which is being advanced by the federation and the Statewide sportsmen's legislative committee.

"Complete and absolute separation of Chesapeake Bay from upland game and angling is essential to efficient management of bay fisheries and hunting and angling," the telegram said.

"Inasmuch as sportsmen, without legislative appropriations, foot the bills for game and angling, licensed hunters and licensed anglers should have a voice in policy development. Taxation without representation is unjust, un-American and unbecoming to the great State of Maryland."

Sight Partly Restored, Blind Man To Get Second Cornea Operation

Hagerstown Doctor To Try New Grafting Of Rabbit Eye

By the Associated Press.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 20.—Another tiny bit of a rabbit's eye may yet help Frank L. Hoffman to see again.

The 61-year-old laborer groped about his home here today, able to distinguish whether the window blinds are up or down and when someone passes in front of him.

That much of Hoffman's sight was restored when Dr. Paul N. Fleming grafted the cornea of a rabbit onto the blind man's right eye.

"As soon as he recovers from a slight cold," said Dr. Fleming today, "we are going to try another little operation of the same sort and I hope it will enable him to see enough to get around again."

Hoffman was blinded when lye and carbolic acid from a spraying machine spattered in his eyes while he was working in a stable last May.

Dr. Fleming, ear, eye, nose and throat specialist, performed the first transplanting operation September 27.

"The first section of cornea transplated seems to be growing on the eye satisfactorily," said Dr. Fleming. "It has rounded up well.

"I hope the second operation, in which another section of rabbit's cornea will be transplanted on the first, will enable him to see much better."

Pound Urges U. S. Return to Common Law

Harvard Law Dean Scores New Deal for Ignoring Precedents

Scoring New Deal agencies for failing to follow established legal precedents, Roscoe Pound, dean emeritus of the Harvard Law School, called for a recodification of common law last night in a speech at Catholic University.

Administrative agencies in this country make the mistake of deciding each case on its apparent merits rather than on the precepts of common law established through centuries of usage, declared Pound. And, he said, these agencies are the ones in which the need for "following and establishing precedent" is the greatest.

Attributing modern failure to understand common law to the complex mass of judicial rulings, statutes, and administrative precedents and rules, Dean Pound called for reorganization of modern law along the lines of "the old natural law codes." A return to the "natural law," or Divine Law as pronounded by Gracian and Thomas Aquinas, is particularly needed to combat subversive Marxian principles, he asserted.

Declaring that religious "law" has had a profound influence on the development of modern jurisprudence, Dean Pound traced the development of the common and Divine Law through history. Religious principles are the basis of common law, he declared.

Family Termed 'Laboratory' of Christian Religion

The family is the real "laboratory" of the Christian religion, Dr. Albert W. Beaven, president of Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, last night told more than 700 parishioners at the "family dinner" of Calvary Baptist Church.

"It is in the family where we prove whether or not we have religion," said Dr. Beaven, "and if our religion won't work in the home, talk in church won't help it."

Highlighting the entertainment was a presentation of sketches and music. Outstanding was the "family skeleton" act, in which a pair of skis on the stage stood as mute reminder of Dr. William S. Abernethy's first attempt to negotiate the snow-covered hills of New Hampshire. Miss Margaret Ringrose directed.

The Rev. Frank E. Johnston, jr., assistant pastor at Calvary, was toastmaster. Dr. William A. Wilbur gave the invocation.

Senator Sheppard, Pinchot Urge Fight For New Ban

Senator Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, and former Gov. Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, yesterday joined in denouncing repeal of prohibition—"the crime of 1933"—and urged 120 persons marking the forty-fourth anniversary of the International Reform Federation to continue the battle for a new national ban on liquor.

Also speaking at the celebration breakfast, held in the Methodist Building, Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, called for support of his bill to halt liquor advertising.

Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, declared: "There is greater need than ever before for reform."

Averring that conditions since repeal are worse than those before the days of prohibition, Sheppard maintained: "The crime of 1933 marches on. We have put aside the rule of reason."

Father of the eighteenth amendment, Sheppard listed the following as "antisocial features of the return on liquor": Financing of liquor in some jurisdictions by public funds, denial of local option, granting of licenses near churches and schools, failure to provide adequate information in schools on the nature and effects of alcohol.

Other speakers were Mrs. Linda Littlejohn, of Australia, women's rights champion; Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of Women's Christian Temperance Union; Mrs. D. Leigh Colvin, national vice president of W. C. T. U.; Dr. Clinton N. Howard, superintendent, and D. Leigh Colvin, president, of the Reform Federation, and Mrs. Emma Fox, 92-year-old author of "Parliamentary Usage" and parliamentarian for the World Woman's Party and other organizations.

Land-Use Talks Start In Maryland

Regional Parleys To Follow Local Conferences; U. S. Aides Co-operate

By the Associated Press.

College Park, Md., Jan. 20.—Maryland farmers are sitting down at conference tables these days with Government experts and the buyers of their products to plan methods for using the Free State's land so it will produce more now and in a future generation when their sons take over the plow handles.

The University of Maryland agricultural extension service is acting as go-between for the farmers and more than a dozen Government branches interested in some phase of farm life.

Already county extension service agents have called their farmer friends in for discussions with representatives of the soil conservation service and the local co-operative dairy, for example, to talk about how they may avoid working at cross purposes

The program will be carried a step further next week when representatives of all the groups of Maryland's Eastern Shore get together for a discussion of their problems at Salisbury.

The conference will start on Wednesday and continue three days. "It is the aim," declared Dr. T. B. Symons, director of the university extension service, "to give farm people an effective voice in forming, correlating, and localizing public agricultural programs

"To better accomplish this purpose, three regional conferences are being held in different sections of the State, where the types of farming are somewhat different."

The other meetings will be held at La Plata on February 7, 8 and 9 and at Hagerstown on February 14, 15 and 16.

From these speeches, discussions and demonstrations the farmers, the experts, the Government agencies and the buyers of farm products will attempt to make all of their particular programs work closer with each other.

Dr. Symons will start the first conference at Salisbury by outlining the procedure and purposes of the idea.

MARYLAND BEATS CAROLINA FIVE, 34 TO 32

Last-Minute Basket Stops U. N. C. Five

3,000 See Knepky Sink Clincher In Overtime

By Jack Munhall.

Capt. George Knepley's midcourt basket in the last 30 seconds of play last night gave Maryland University a 34-32 overtime victory over North Carolina before 3,000 fans at Ritchie Coliseum.

The win, Maryland's fourth in five conference starts pushed them into second place behind Wake Forest and virtually assured them qualification in the annual championship tournament.

Knepley's basket, a desperate fling from the far sidelines ended as thrilling a game as seen at college Park in recent years. After dissipating a 14-7 half-time lead with slippy defensive work, the Terps fell behind 26-19 with ten minutes left but rallied briskly to deadlock the count at 28-28 when Adam Bengoechea dropped in one of two fouls 10 seconds before regulation time had expired.

Overtime Starts Slowly

The overtime period started slowly, Bill Rea's basket being the only points of the first two minutes. But suddenly the tempo quickened until it approached the pulsating height of the late portion of the second half.

Eddie Johnson, re-entering the game, boosted Maryland's lead to 31-28 with a charity throw but Hank Peesaf, a substitute for Bill McCracken, Tarheel star who was ejected via the personal foul route for his foul of Johnson, dribbled half the length of the court to toss in a one-hander and reduce the deficit to 30-31.

But then the cheers of the crowd, bursting like swollen waters through a weakened dam, were stifled and Maryland's victory hopes blackened, for Hank Peesaf, a Tarheel substitute, stole the ball and dribbled half the distance of the court to sink the shot that tied the score again at 32-32.

Doesn't Get Excited

But Knepley, coolest player on the floor, took the throw-in from out of bounds, dribbled as far as he could and then without appearing to aim let fly. It was a perfect shot, landing squarely in the net with a sickly swish.

It was this same lanky, blond-haired Knepley who led Maryland's second half comeback. With the count favoring North Carolina, 26-25, Knepley pushed one in from near midcourt.

McCracken retaliated with a lengthy basket for the Tarheels and with the big clock at the end of the gym showing ten seconds t oplay the stands were beginning to empty. But in the ensuing scramble for the ball under North Carolina's basket, Bengoechea was hacked and given two shots.

His first was sufficient to tie the score, banking in and remaining in the basket after rolling precariously around the rim. His second attempt, which could have ended the game then, rimmed the hoop and bounced out.

Maryland took an early lead and maintained a healthy advantage until the beginning of the second hlf, when the Tarheels found a flaw in the Terps' zone defense and fed the ball to McCracken, who criss-crossed under the basket. Three baskets by McCracken and others by Severin and Jim Howard quickly erased Maryland's 14-7 lead and soon the Tarheels were in the van.

But that was before Knepley started his one-man attack to completely change the outlook.

Knepley, with five baskets and as many free throws, was the game's high scorer with 15 points. McCracken chipped in with 11.

The loss of its big center, Ben Dilworth, midway in the second half seemed to slow the Tarheels down.

By the Associated Press.

Lexington, Va., Jan. 20.—Dr. Frances P. Gaines, president of the Washington and Lee University, announced today the contract of Warren (Tex) Tilson, head football coach, had been extended for one year. Simultaneously the W. & L. board of trustees declared it had approved a resolution by the faculty committee to appoint a special committee to study the athletic policy at the university.

The contract extension was approved yesterday at a meeting of the university's board of trustees, but atnnouncement of its action was withheld until today by administration officials.

Approval of Tilson's contract followed a fatvorable recommendation by the faculty committee on intercollegiate athletics.

The committee, in a reolution to the board, termed Tilson's work "entirely commendable." Prior to the committee's action, several alumni chapters had protested the reappointment of Tilson.

Tilson has been head coach of Washington and Lee since 1933.

The committee to investigate athletics will be composed of three trustees, three alumni, three faculty members, three students, and Dr. Gaines. The trustees will be named by George W. St. Clair, of Tazewell, rector of the board, and the alumni by Joseph Lykes, of New York, president of the Alumni Association.

Dr. Gaines said six members of the committee had been selected: From the faculty, Dr. Livingston

Public Links Motion Tabled By Md. Golfers

State Association Elects Galliger, Keilty and Pitt

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 21.—The movement to make public links golfers members of the Maryland State Golfers Association and eligible for tournament competition was tabled for at least a year at the annual meeting of the State body here tonight at the Baltimore Country Club.

After a torrid two-hour discussion, a vote was taken, 11-5, in favor of admitting the municipal golfers, but as the vote was not unanimous it was referred to the executive committee. The five dissenting members were all Washington clubs—Argyle, Chevy Chase, Columbia, Congressional and Manor. Beaver Dam was the only District club voting to admit public link players.

Harry P. Galliger was elected president succeeding John V. D. Tweedy. Dr. Robert A. Keilty (Congressional) was made vice president from the Washington district, and Harry G. Pitt, golf committee chairman at Manor Country Club, was elected second vice president from the Washington area—a new office.

The tournament schedule was announced by Chairman Edgar M. Lucas. Virtually the entire card of 1938 will be repeated, with no new events and few one-day handicaps and pro-amateurs. The Maryland State women's championship will come to Congressional with dates tentatively set for May 23-27. Baltimore was awarded the Maryland Amateur, at Rolling Road on June 23-25, and the Maryland Open at Hillendale on August 8. The amateur was scheduled for a Washington course, but as the Middle Atlantic Amateur will be played at Chevy Chase, the committee decided to wait until 1940 to give Washington its turn.

Devitt Winner Over Blair, 25-22

Devitt Prep turned back Montgomery-Blair High last night in a rough court battle by a 25-22 margin at the latter's gym. Devitt held a 9-8 lead at the half and an 18-13 advantage at the end of the third quarter. Billy Vermillion, former Central High player, led the attack for the winners.

Nats Draw But One Home Holiday Date

May 30th Twin Bill With A's Lone Extra Attraction Here

The Nats have drawn only one of the choice holiday dates at home, it was revealed yesterday with the announcement of the complete American League schedule for 1939.

A Decoration Day double header with the Philadelphia Athletics is the lone holiday attraction assigned to Griffith Stadium.

The Washington Club received a financial boon, however, when it was designated as the July 4 opponent of the Yankees in a double header at Yankee Stadium with its prospects of an 80,000 crowd.

The third holiday date on the schedule—Labor Day—will find the Nats playing the Red Sox at Fenway Park in a double header.

Like every other club in the league, the Nats were assigned to 12 games at home on Saturdays and 12 on Sundays.

Following the season inaugural with the Yankees at Griffith Stadium on April 17, the Nats will go to Philadelphia for a two-game series with the Athletics and return to Griffith Stadium to resume with the Yankees in a three-game series.

As has been customary in recent years, Eastern clubs will take four swings through the West, and vice versa. Formerly only, three trips were made into the West during the season but three years ago four-game series were ruled out and three-game series became the fashion.

Dreyfus Hopes For 4th Place

Thata first dvision finish is his goal in American Backetbal League competition this season was admitted by Coach Joe Dreyfus yesterday as he continued pointing his Brewers for tomorrow's afternoon's 3 o'clock game with Wilkes-Barre's gold Barons in Heurich gymnasium.

Pleased with the prospects of his young ball club, Dreyfus cites that his Brewers today are but 3½ games removed from New York's faltering fourth place Jewels.

A first division finish, Dreyfus txplains, would qualify the local boys for a spot in the American Backetball Leakue's championship playoff, which follows the regular season games.

Hopewell, Va., Jan. 20.—Hopewell High's sharp-eyed quintet chalked up a 32-to-22 victory tonight over George Washington High, of Alexandria.

Hopewell's almost airtight defense kept the Alexandria sharpshooters out of range, while King, Hopewell's fleet-footed center, dropped the ball through the hoop consistently. He was high scorer with 15 points.

Noland, center for the Alexandria cagers, led their assault, but for most of the game he was kept bottled up by Phelps, Hopewell guard.

This Morning

POVICH

Pretty soon, I am thinking, Tony Galento will be in a prize ring fighting Joe Louis for the world's heavyweight title whether we like him or not. The experts may be disposed to laugh off Two-Ton Toney as a fourth-rate ham, but a man named Mike Jacobs already is evincing great interest in him and Mr. Jacobs is an important figure in the fistic scheme.

Reports have it thta one of the first men to rush to the ringside and interview Galento after his one-round massacre of Jorge Brescia the other night was Promoter Jacobs. He was not merely toying with the idea of putting Galento under contract, but was serious about it, waving some large figures in front of the Newark beer dispenser.

Jacobs is no green hand at the fight business. The boxing writers may say that Galento has no defense, that he is not in shape, that he can hit only with a left hand, but Jacobs sees much, much more than that in the fellow. He sees a colorful figure who has achieved a string of quick knockouts and who is fast establishing himself as a gate attraction.

The heavyweight division is in need of somebody like Galento, even if he can fight only a little bit, which may be doing him an injustice. Jacobs is not keen about rematching Baer and Joe Louis, and there is the possibility that Baer may dispose of Lou Nova when they meet in May. Galento might be the answer to Jacobs' promotorial problems. Whether he can fight or not, he packs 'em in. He drew 10,000 fans against Brescia the other night. No other fighter in the land could have drawn that kind of a house with such as Brescia.

No Business Visible

Sure, many of Galento's fight* have been under suspicion as tank affairs, but the naked eye could not detect anything amiss the other night when he stopped Brescia in a round. In doing that, he was cutting to one-third the time that Joe Louis required to dispose of Brescia. And he did it not with a punch on the chin, but with body punches. It has been a long time since a heavyweight who could punch to the body came along. Dempsey was virtually the last. Tunney could counter punch to the heart, but he was not known as a body puncher.

Galento goes merrily on his way knocking over anybody who will fight him. He hasn't ducked anybody. When he agreed to fight John Henry Lewis last Summer he was scheduled to meet th keind of a fighter who would make him look ridiculous. The clever Lewis was expected to stab him silly, but Two-ton Tony was willing to take his chances. If that bout had transpired, if Galento had not been floored, finally, by pneumonia, it is very probable that John Henry Lewis would not be in the Madison Square Garden ring next Wednesday evening as the opponent of Joe Louis.

Max Baer and Tommy Farr laugh Galento off. They call him a ham and a bum, but it's Two Ton Tony who is making the money these days. He fights on an average of at least once a month and he's commanding attention. He has proved to be a timely discovery by Joe Jacobs, his manager, who lost his meal ticket when Joe Louis knocked out Max Schmeling.

Only two years ago Galento was, indeed, a fourth-rater. He lost bouts with great regularity and was regarded simply as a horrible fighter. But something apparently has transformed him. His triumphs cannot be merely a careful build-up. Somewhere along the line, somebody would have deviated from the script at Galento's expense, if he could. And one fact has always been rather well established. Galento can hit with that left.

The Gallagher Bout

His detractors point to, among other things, Tony's defeat by Marty Gallagher three years ago in a bout at Griffith Stadium. That fight was recorded as a technical knockout victory for Gallagher in the twelfth round. It was the first time Galento had ever been kayoed. But the mere listing of the affair in the record books does not tell the story. I saw the fight. For 11 of the 12 rounds Galento gave Gallagher a fearful beating. In the twelfth he was butted and a cut opened above his eye. It cheated Tony of victory. The bout was awarded Gallagher simply to halt the flow of gore.

Promoter Jacobs would not have the face to toss Galento in against Joe Louis unless Tony has established himself as the winner over at least one outstanding heavyweight—Farr, or Baer or Nova. I wouldn't want to say that Galento couldn't lick all of 'em. Certainly Farr wouldn't hurt him much, and Nova is still green. Tony can lick those kind. If he licked Baer it would undoubtedly be because he outgamed him, which he certainly figures to do.

But the most that Galento could expect out of a fight with Joe Louis is his share of the gate. In Louis he'd be meeting a man who would take every advantage of his shortcomings. Galento's native courage would probably cause him to take more punishment than any of Louis' opponents have ever absorbed. The fight would be a sorry spectacle of a game guy being punched to a pulp. But Galento would have at least demonstrated that he was able to work his way up to the title shot, clown or no.

Indians Win Again

ALL STAR GAME AT NEW YORK, TUESDAY, JULY 11, 1939

Roosevelt Beats Western, 24-21; Wilson Defeats Anacostia

Down In Front

With Richards Vidmer

Perhaps I may be pardoned for feeling rather pleased with myself because I didn't go over to Newark for the fight between Tony Galento and Jorge Brescia. I had an idea it wouldn't be worth the trip, and according to the testimony of those who did go, I was quite correct.

VIDMER.

Something happened to Brescia after 1 minute and 41 seconds of the first round, and that's all there was to the fight. Just what happened to the Argentinian seems to be a mater of some mystery. According to a few of the witnesses, Galento hit him in the stomach. Others claim they didn't even see that blow struck. And no one has been able to explain just what it was that made Brescia collapse on the canvas and stay there.

Jacobs Is Convinced

However, this victory for some strange seems to have convinced Mike Jacobs that Galento should be elevated in pugilistic society, and he is talking of matching him with Lou Nova very shortly. Of course, that might be the logical thing to do, as Nova is the most interesting young heavyweight rising in the ranks and Galento National Boxing Association's book of challengers.

But Uncle Mike couldn't see Galento before his victory over Brescia, although it is difficult to figure how anyone can overlook him when he looms up on the horizon. Uncle Mike wasn't the least interested in two-ton Tony when he knocked over a lot of men named Thomas. But the collapse of Brescia from, what some seem to suspect was mortal fear, somehow made a very favorable impression on the promoter.

This, however, shouldn't bring on a sudden case of chronic insomnia. Stranger things have happened in the pugilistic profession without causing any great loss of sleep. And as a matter of fact, the customers probably will be very eager indeed to see a fight between Tony Galento and Lou Nova.

Blames the Push

I don't know whose fault this is. Possibly the blame should be shouldered by those of us who write about such things. Or perhaps the real faults lies with the reading public who realize only that we mention the names of Galento and Nova frequently without paying the slightest attention to what we have to say about them.

As far as I can recall no one yet has hailed Galento as a great fighter, capable of beating Joe Louis for his heavyweight laurels. He simply has been described as a fair puncher, a rather laughable, roly-poly sort of person in the ring, who guzzles beer rather regularly, resists any urge he may have to train seriously and does a lot of talking in a more or less dull manner.

Except for the fact that he can punch pretty well in a roughhouse sort of way, none of the things written about the man who walks like a barrel has had anything to do with his ability as a fighter. Some emphasis has been placed on the fact that he has never been knocked out, or even knocked down, but just as often it has been pointed out that he has been defeated something like 20 times.

St. John's Barely Beats Bethesda

Prep Team Noses Suburbanites By Two Points

St. John's Prep continued its uncomfortable habit of barely winning last night by dissipating a 12-4 halftime lead before finally nosing out Bethesda Chevy Chase, 23-21, at Bethesda.

The Johnnies whose most recent start saw them defeat Wilson by two points on a midcourt basket in the last seconds of play again seemed able to score only when baskets were necessary for victory.

Joe Gallagher, whose timely throw nipped Wilson, was the hero of St. John's triumph, two of his four baskets coming in the last quarter.

West's Long Shot In Extra Period of See-Saw Battle Wins for Riders

By Bill Burnett.

Roosevelt High won its first interhigh start last night at Tech, 24-21 over a fighting Western crew, but the victory was earned the hard way—in an overtime session. The other half of the double-header was taken by Woodrow Wilson, 30-17, over Anacostia's first year club. Almost 1,500 spectators watched the pair of hard-fought contests.

Had it not been for an oversight on the part of Capt. Billy Robertson, stocky Roosevelt forward, late in the game, Roosevelt might have won without the worry of an extra period. Robertson, unaware of the fact that his team had had its quota of time outs, called another when Roosevelt led 21-20. Referee Keppel was forced to give Western a free throw, Jack Price making it good to knot the score with seconds left.

In the extra period, Bill Robertson immediately drew a foul shot on Jake Hilleary and made it good. Half the two points necessary to win the game was Roosevelt's. Hilleary was retired to the bench with four personals. Then George West, who had been limited to one field goal and one foul toss by Western's Jimmy Horn until that time, took careful aim from near the center of the floor and ended the game with a two-pointer.

Riders Lead 7-3

The game was a thriller from the start. Roosevelt held a 7-3 advantage after one quarter, but saw the advantage dwindle and the score tied at 9-9. Again the count was deadlocked, 12-12, with 20 seconds of the half remaining, Hilleary boosting Western into a 14-12 lead for the rest period with a fancy snowbird.

Western seemed a certain winner as the game drew to a close. It held a 20-16 margin with three minutes left, but the lead was snipped by successive goals by Robertson, Hymie Perlo and Nick Zuras. The rest of the game was played with the spectators yelling themselves hoarse from the edge of the playing floor. Perlo's 10 points was high for the game, the powerful threat of West being bottled hopelessly by Horn. Bob Holloran, veteran guard, dropped three field goals and a charity toss to pace the losers.

Wilson Too Strong

Anacostia's loss in the opener was expected, though hardly by the top-heavy count. Wilson, in possession of three veterans and two classy novices, was plainly too strong for the slender Indians. Added to that, Anacositia seemed sadly off its game, many of its shots circling the rim and dropping out.

Midway through the first period, Anacostia held a 3-2 lead but that was the last time its colors were out in front. The lightning-like attack of Bart Fugler, forward, and Charley Findley, center, hoisted the count to 6-3 in the space of several seconds and Wilson was never headed.

Behind, 17-11, at the half, the Indians were unable to rally and allowed the Presidents a 21-11 lead before Burroughs, substitute guard, scored the only points for Anacostia in thethird period. Johnny Placos was beginning to get the range in the final period, having dropped two field efforts in quick succession, when the whistle ended the single-man rally.

It was strictly a scoring match between Wilson's Fugler and Findley, and Anacostia's Placos and Anderson. Most of the substitutes used by Coach Julian Colangelo failed to score, as did three other men used by Wilson. Findley's 19 points was easily high for both games.

St. John's Votes 12-1 Against 'De-Emphasis'

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Jan. 20.—St. John's College students went on record almost 12-to-1 today against the school administration's "de-emphasis" of intercollegiate sports.

Victor G. Bloede, co-editor of the St. John's College newspaper, which conducted a secret referendum on the administration's policy, said the students voted 70 to 6 against elimination of all intercollegiate athletics.

The school's enrollment is 120.

"Forty-six voted against even a "de-emphasis" of college sports such has been instituted at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore," Bloede said. "They wanted a full schedule of intercollegiate games, but 28 students voted that "de-emphasized" sports would be all right with them, but not complete elimination."

On a third question in the referendum, 63 students voted against the elimination of campus social fraternities, while 9 votes favored the administration ban, which will go into effect next September.

"That certainly is a strong reaction to the administration's new policies," declared Bloede, "and I hope it will lead them to rescind their decisions.

"The college authorities will see the results of the referendum when they come out in today's Collegian, but I probably will lay them before Dean Scott Buchanan personally," he said.

The paper declared the referendum was called because the students had been given no opportunity to express their wishes before the curtailment of sports and fraternities was announced.

"Even the students who came in under the new administration's plan of education centered around the classics voted against the administration's athletic and fraternity policies," said Bloede.

"Just as many freshmen and sophomore voted against them as juniors and seniors.

"For example, I am a sophomore and I was attracted here by the new plan of education. But I'm not a new administration student any more."

With 150 copies of the Collegian in the mails going to alumni, Bloede said he hoped the graduates would make the referendum basis of a campaign to get sports and fraternities restored.

The Johnnies have not won a single victory in the seven intercollegiate basketball games played so far this season.

Friends Fives Win, Lose to Woodward

Junior Team Victor But Seniors Bow By 32-21 Score

Junior and senio: basketball players of Woodward Prep and Friends School split even in a double-header yesterday at the Friends gym, Woodward senior team whipping Friends seniors, 32-21, and Friends taking the junior encounter by a 11-10 count.

Because of the closeness of the game, the clash between the younger lads was the most exciting. Through three periods the clubs battled on even terms, until Woodward held a 10-9 edge with five seconds to play. Bobby Townsend, Friends forward, made his only field goal of the game to give his team a narrow victory.

The hot scoring hand of Fast, guard of the Woodward seniors, was mainly responsible for the team's convincing victory. Fast sank 11 field goals and a brace of charity throws for a 24-pount total. The indifferent point making of Friends was paced by Oliver McKee, center, with 6 points.

Galento, Back in Good Graces, Is Still Out of Title Picture

Tony, However, Figures Prominently in Recipe For Heavyweight Stew; Offered Nova Bout

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 20.—Bash Boulevard had its good ear to the ground today, and the anxious citizens of Orange, N. J., will no doubt be pleased to learn that eheir one-and-only Tony Galento is back in the good graces of Uncle Mike Jacobs and his brain trust.

Uncle Mike, himself, just won't talk about heavyweight futures until after tea and cakes are served at the Joe Louis-John Henry Lewis title party next Wednesday. But you have it on good authority that the belting beer barrel from across the Hudson River figures largely in the recipe your good uncle is concocting for the heavyweight stew.

For a time there, Tony's general classification for all heavyweights —"Dose bums"—was ringing on deaf ears as far as the center of the industry was concerned. But you can't laugh off nine straight knockouts, wet, damp or otherwise. So right now, Tony's future, once he fulfills fights for which he is already booked in Miami, Detroit and Chicago, will be as gratifying as the beer and spaghetti he sets before the guests in his orange drinking emporium.

Offered Nova Bout

First off, there's the offer Mike already has made him for a get-together with California Lou Nova in Madison Square Garden March 10. Two-Ton Tony and his manager, Jabbering Joe Jacobs, are all for that. But in the event such negotiations fall through, something new popped up today to take its place.

This was the arrival of Gus Greenlee, who reported that his heavy, John Henry Lewis, is ready, willing and able to become the party of the second part with Galento. Gus' offer may have been just a little bit rash, when you come to think of it, considering that John Henry is in for no pink tea Wednesday night.

Tony and Joe Jacobs accepted Mike's proposition for a Nova meeting on the spot, but just what Lou thinks of this remains to be seen. Lou already is signed to tangle with Max Baer in May, and may not want to risk his title chances with the pudgy pounder, whose left hooks to the body operate in the same general fashion as a set of meat cleavers. At least, Jorge Brescia, who was stowed away by Tony in 1 minute 41 seconds last night, wil testify they do.

Promises Series of Kayoes

Nova and his manager, Ray Carlin, are relaxing just now in Hot Springs, far from the Cauliflower Club, but Mike was in touch with them today to learn their reaction. Just how they feel about it was not disclosed. For Uncle Mike is taking no chances of any other heavyweight headliners stealing the attention of the cash customers from his championship waltz Wednesday.

Tony, back on his diet again after a day of traing—the diet is made up exclusively of (1) lots of beer and (2) more spaghetti—was still shouting at a late hour this evening that he would (a) flatten Nova, (b) annihilate Baer, and (c) knock Louis apart with one punch, in that order. This statement may seem far-fetched in most quarters, but Galento, who is either the most naive man in the ring, or the best actor, is fully confident such a program is a push-over.

Natie Grown-Galento Bout O. K. for Detroit

Detroit, Jan. 20 (AP).—Jack Kearns, fight promoter, announced tonight that Tony Galento, ranked by the National Boxing Association as No. 1 challenger for Joe Louis' heavyweight title, has been matched with Natie Brown for a 10-round fight at Detroit's Olympia February 3.

Rockville's Five Winner In Overtime

Frederick High Bows, 16-14; Ray Stars in Long Court Struggle

Rockville, Md., Jan. 20.—Two overtime periods were required before Rockville High nosed out Frederick High today, 16-14, in one of the most thrilling court battles ever staged here. With 10 seconds of the regulation time remaining, Tom Ray saved the day for Rockville by sinking a basket which tied the count at 13-all.

In the first extra period, each team scored a foul shot and the rivals rested with the deadlock at 14 points. Under the new rule of "quick death," the first team to score wins and Forward Ray again proved the opportunist. He took a lightning-like pace from Bud Slater and dropped it through the hoop for the deciding points. It was Ray's fourth basket of the battle and allowed him to lead the individual scorers. Murray kept the visitors in the running with three field goals.

The struggle was keen from start to finish, the rivals being tied at 5 points at the end of the half. Frederick held a 7-5 advantage at the end of the third period. Both teams played exceptionally strong defensive games.

Wilson College Five Defeats Blue Ridge

Continuing his dizzy scoring pace, Charley Clark last night rang up 18 points to lead Wilson Teachers College to a 41-34 victory over Blue Ridge College at the Wilson gym.

Clark, a former Central all-high player, has averaged in the neighborhood of 14 points a game this season and should he maintain that pace he will set a new all-time record, both for average and total points.

"Flash" Gordon, Clark's running mate at forward, continued to run Charley a close second for scoring honors by weighing in with 12.

Wilson was ahead only, 20-19 at half but the Clark-Gordon combination started rolling in the second half and the Teachers were pulling away at the finish.

Easterners Turn Back Episcopal

Inter-High Champs Win, 22-21, Over Alexandrians in Stiff Battle

Eastern's fast-improving inter-high defenders clung to a meager lead through the last three minutes of a basketball game with Episcopal High, of Alexandria, yesterday, and won their fifth game of the season, 22-21, on the home floor. There was a time, though, when White Tide prospects of a victory seemed dark indeed.

Throughout the third quarter and for three minutes of the final period, Eastern trailed the classy invaders, once by 16-11 and again by 20-15. But a short-lived hot streak, wherein Ray Holben, "Bap" Battiste, Howard Hancock and Lenny Mills accounted for points, hoisted Eastern into a 22-20 lead with three minutes remaining.

Lead Is Reduced

Bill Wroth, bespectacled Episcopal forward, sawed that margin in half, with a charity toss called on Holben. And when Lamar Davis, Episcopal guard, was given a free throw at the expense of Battiste, there was every chance that the game would go into extra time. Davis missed, however, and Eastern "froze" the ball until the gun relieved things.

Forced into the clash minus Les Cooksey, dependable forward, who is out with a severe cold, and with Mills suffering a mild case of the flu, Eastern basketeers played a smart floor game except for the third-quarter lapse. Johnny Stasulli and Battiste paced the Easterners with five points each, though their totals were only one point better than the totals of three other Lincoln Parkers. The flashy work of Duke Bradley, against whom Capt. Hancock's guarding was most ineffective, kept the visitors very much in the game until the end.

Episcopal is the second team this season to enter the Eastern gym with an unblemished record. Three victories belonged to the Alexandrians before yesterday's engagement. St. John's fell before the defenders when its undefeated streak had reached four.

Martinsburg Outlasts Central

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 20.—Central High, of Washington, was defeated here tonight by Martinsburg High, 22 to 13, as the host club spurted to a wide lead in the final minutes of the game.

The District team fought on even terms with Martinsburg for the first three periods, but led at only one stage of the battle, the end of the first period, after Orenstein and Martin had dropped twin pointers and Panage a foul.

The local quint found the range in the second canto, and poured in 10 points while holding the visitors to 4. The third frame was evenly fought, both Martinsburg and Central sinking 4 points. The payoff came in the last stanza, when the Bulldogs outpointed the Green, 9 to 2.

Bucky Harris

By Shirley Povich

Chapter Fourteen

IN HIGH SPIRITS, BUCKY HARRIS had moved in as manager of the Boston Red Sox at the start of the 1934 season. It was definitely a step upward for Bucky. At Detroit his teams had suffered from an absolute lack of big-league pitching and the future there was not encouraging. But at Boston, ah, that appeared to be a manager's paradise.

Harris anticipated no pennant for the Red Sox in 1934, because seventh-place teams are not transformed into pennant winners in one season. But he knew that Tom Yawkey was backing the club with his millions. In his talks with Yawkey, Harris learned that the Boston owner was prepared to spend heavily for both major league and minor league talent. The city, long buried in the second division of the league, would appreciate even a first division club.

Yawkey quickly demonstrated to Harris that he meant business. During the winter he bought Lefty Grove, Rube Walberg and Max Bishop from Connie Mack for $125,000 in cash. It was a powerful start. But the Boston club needed a complete overhauling. Rick Ferrell had been purchased from the Browns the season before for $25,000, but the inept Eddie Morgan was at first base and there was not an outstanding outfielder on the club which numbered Carl Reynolds, Roy Johnson and Rookie Julius Solters as its regulars.

Quite innocently, before the season started, Harris became involved in differences with General Manager Eddie Collins, to whom Yawkey had given complete control of the business office. Realizing that the Red Sox needed added pitching talent, Harris suggested the purchase of Wes Ferrell, then a salary holdout with the Cleveland Indians.

WHILE THE RED SOX WERE EN ROUTE North after breaking training camp in the South, Ferrell met the team at Greensboro, N. C., and worked out with the squad. Harris was taken by the pitching of Ferrell whose arm was supposed to have gone dead. He recommended to Collins that Ferrell be bought if a deal could be arranged.

Collins exploded. "I wouldn't have that guy on my ball club," he shouted. "We'll make no deal for Ferrell." The Red Sox general manager was implying, of course, that Ferrell was too temperamental.

On the Red Sox's first Western trip of the season, on which Yawkey accompanied the team, Harris again mentioned that the addition of Wes Ferrell would help the club immensely. Yawkey took him at his word and arranged a deal whereby the big right hander and Outfielder Dick Porter, also of the Indians, would come to Boston in exchange for $25,000 in cash.

It was the beginning of a long series of differences with General Manager Eddie Collins.

Ferrell began immediately to justify Harris' confidence. He proved to be the leading pitcher on the Boston club, winning 14 and losing only 5, after his late start. The success of his comeback was accentuated the following season when he won 22 games for the Boston club.

The Red Sox of 1934 suffered a terrific set-back, however, even before they left their training camp. Lefty Grove, winner of 24 games against 8 defeats in '33, and the man on whom Harris was pinning his greatest hopes, came up with the first sore arm of his pitching career. For the first time in ten seasons, Grove failed to win more games than he lost. He contributed only eight victories to the Red Sox campaign and suffered eight defeats.

DESPITE THE COLLAPSE OF GROVE, the Red Sox under Harris were a popular club in Boston. Hub fans turned out in record numbers at Fenway Park to watch the Red Sox as a first division team. Harris was hailed as the man who would lead Boston baseball out of the wilderness. Pretty well blasted was the theory that a Boston manager had to be an Irishman to find favor with the fans. The last three Boston managers had been named Carrigan, Collins and McManus.

Harris took the Boston club into the first division early in the season and rarely were the Red Sox out of it. For weeks they hovered around second and third place, and finished fourth. Had Lefty Grove been able to show a semblance of his old form, they undoubtedly would have finished second to the Detroit Tigers.

Yawkey was immensely pleased. He abandoned his varied other interests to subuordinates to travel with the team. Building a pennant winner had become akin to a passion with him. He talked long and earnestly with Harris about developing a farm system, and asked Harris if any other stars were available for purchase.

Bucky knew that Connie Mack might be disposed to part with Jimmy Foxx and perhaps an outfielder or two. Yawkey said he would bid. Harris was envisioning 1935 as the year when the Red Sox might bring him the third pennant of his managerial career.

He had been signed to a one-year contract when he took the Boston job at the 1934 season. That he would be tendered another contract by Yawkey he did not doubt for a moment. The Red Sox had set a new record for attendance during the '34 season and for the first time in 16 years they had finished in the first division. He had taken them over as a seventh-place club which had won only 63 of their 154 games in 1933.

With Yawkey and Collins he had already discussed plans for 1935. They had even agreed on a new staff of coaches to be selected, personally, by Harris. Bucky entrained for Washington at the end of the season and rejoined his family here.

AFTER SPENDING AN AFTERNOON shooting rail birds in the marshes of the Patuxent River, Harris returned to his home to be informed by Mrs. Harris that Washington newspapers were carrying a story announcing the fact that Joe Cronin had been sold to the Red Sox for $250,000.

Harris realized instantly what that meant. He knew that if Cronin went to the Red Sox he would go as manager . . . and Bucky Harris was out of a job.

The telephone rang and it was Eddie Collins, calling from Boston. Coldly business-like, Collins told Bucky that Cronin would get the job as manager and that Harris was free to look for another job. "If that's all you've got to say, very well," answered Harris, and hung up.

Immediately, he was telephoned by Yawkey. The Red Sox owner told Bucky that he hoped they would continue their friendship despite the Cronin deal. With a genuine affection for Yawkey, Harris believed him. He accepted Yawkey's invitation to go on a hunting trip at the Boston owner's Carolina plantation.

A $20,000-per-year salary as manager of the Red Sox now lost to him, Harris started thinking of a job. Cronin would leave a vacancy at Washington, of coruse. Bucky had no false pride. He wouldn't wait on Clark Griffith to offer him the job. He would ask Mr. Griffith for the job, immediately.

Robert L., $14.60 Shot, Wins Hialeah Feature

Don Meade Adds Pair Of Winners

Big Race Victor Is Near Track Mark; Pastry Is Second

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 20.—Robert L., a five-year-old son of Noah in the highly respected silks of Herbert M. Woolf's Woolford Farm, today scored his second victory in as many winter outings when he defeated ten other veterans in the Silver Bluff purse. Withstanding a desperate drive, the $14.60 for Two Shot came within three-fifths of a second of Brevity's mile and a furlong track record as he completed the journey in 1:48 4-5 under 107 pounds.

Pastry, less than 2 to 1 favorite representing Solly Pisacano, headed Warren Wright's Count Morse for second money, While Maeriel was fourth.

Four Widener cup eligibles finished in the wake of the winner. Count Morse, Her Reigh, Sun Power and Xavier constituted the quartet.

Jockey Dan Meade rode two winners on the program, finishing the day aboard Seed, a $7.50 shot in the eighth race.

Apprentice Warren Yarberry again proved a thorn in the side of Pastry. A few days ago, the Dallas youngster rode Pastry and had the best horse under him, but was beaten by Xavier. Today, Yarberry accepted the mount on the victorious Robert L. and succeeded in beating the highly fancied Pastry.

Robert L. Raied

Her Reigh and Count Morse battled for early command. Pastry moved into the runner-up posijtion as Her Reigh tired approaching the top of the stretch. In the meantime, Yarberry was doing a faultless job of rating Robert L within range of the leaders. The latter spurtde and saved ground at the final turn. He drew alongside Count Morse and Pastry after straightening for home. The three horses battled heads apart into the last furlong, where Robert L finally pulled away under strong urging.

It did not take long for the hard riding Meade to pick up his winning stride. The little veteran drove Sun Antioch, the $3.20 for two choice, to a nose decision over Distractible in the 7 furlong second race. Hypo was a well beaten third. Sun Antioch rushed to the front and was three lengths clear at the top of the stretch. Distractible gained steadily through the stretch and with riders reversed, might have made the grade.

Don Meade took the riding honors for the day again when he booted Seed, $7.50, to a three lengths victory in the finale. This gave Meade an average of two winners per day for the nine days of the meeting. White Ginger was second and Skagerrak third.

DICTY STEP broke forwardly, but was pinched back midway down the backstretch, was nursed off the pace until reaching the turn, where he began improving his position on the outside and then continued stoutly to overhaul RACEAWAY in the final drive. RACEAWAY, quickest to begin, set a brisk pace, saved plenty of ground and weakened only in the final sixteenth under extreme pressure. MISS WHIM, kept close up with the leaders, held on well. ROSEMAIN showed good speed all the way. GRAND PAGEANT, fractious at the post, broke well, but could not keep up with the pace.

SECOND RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:32. Off 2:32½. Winner, F. J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SUN ANTIOCH, $3.20, $2.60, $2.60; DISTRACTABLE, $9.30, $7.00; HYPO, $17.30.

SUN ANTIOCH, close up on the outside in the run down the backstretch, drew clear leaving the backstretch, saved ground rounding the turn and opened up a winning lead straightening into the stretch, but faltered suddenly when the final test came and just lasted. DISTRACTABLE gradually bettered his position and, responding gamely to punishment, was wearing the winner down at the end. HYPO, in close attendance of the leader in the early running, weakened through the stretch, but outlasted BLUE GROTTO. The latter was crowded back approaching the half-mile pole, swung to the outside rounding the turn and closed strong.

Daily Double, Dicty Step and Sun Antioch, Paid $19.20.

THIRD RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:02. Off 3:02½. Winner, J. Pepp's ch. g. BRIERTON, hustled to the front in the opening furlong, set a steady pace under light restraint while saving ground, winning with speed in reserve. JUST BUCK, hard urged, gradually bettered his position in the final three furlongs and finished gamely under punishment. OZARK, away tardily, worked his way forwardly between the field after entering the stretch and wore HONDO down in the final strides. The latter, in nearest pursuit of the winner in the early running, weakened in the last furlong. BOB C, vigorously ridden, never threatened.

FOURTH RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,100; allowances. The Daytona Beach. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 3:31. Off 3:39. Winner, Mrs. C. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FLYING LILL, $10.20, $6.80, $4.60; SURE OFF, $3.90, $3.20; SUGARAGE, $5.00.

FLYING LILL, scoring in close pursuit of the leaders until straightened into the stretch, drew out with a rush, but was kept under mild pressure to the end. SURE OFF, slow to find his stride, made a game effort when straightened into the stretch, but Nash was unable to properly handle him and he continued to bear in in the final quarter mile. SUGARAGE began rapidly, set a fast pace while saving ground, but faltered in the final drive. SPEEDY BOOGER, a forward contender early, weakened in the last furlong and was not persevered with.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROBERT L., $14.60, $6.40, $3.60; PASTRY, $3.60, $2.90; COUNT MORSE, $4.20.

ROBERT L, away forwardly, was eased off the pace rounding the first turn, worked his way forwardly on the inside in the final half mile and, stealing through entering the stretch, drew out under punishment, but was only under a strong hand ride at the finish. PASTRY, going prominently on the outside under light restraint, finished courageously when the final test came and wore COUNT MORSE down. The latter, a keen factor, raced HER REIGH into defeat rounding the lower turn, assumed command coming into the stretch, but faltered under his impost in the final drive. MAERIEL, finished with his usual belated rush.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles (turf course). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward, fillies and mares. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:37. FLYING LANCE followed the leaders under restraint until midway around the lower turn, moved up on the outside with determination when placed to pressure and, wearing the leaders down through the stretch, won going away. PLAYDEMA worked her way up on the inside in the early stages, came around RAVENNA entering the stretch, took a brief lead, but was not strong enough in the final drive. MICRO, in the thick of contention and saving the most ground the entire trip, continued with good courage in the drive. RAVENNA, a forward contender from the start, had no excuses. SUNSET GIRL, on the outside and well up early, quit midway around the lower turn. ALPENGLOW was going strong on the stretch turn when she stumbled and fell over the inside horse.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won cleverly; place driving. Went to post 5:06. Off 5:06½. Winner, G. W. Pershall's dk

Wheat Prices Nervous but Fairly Steady

Dip, Rise and React Market Is Narrow Corn Prices Irregular

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 20.—The wheat market staged a repeat performance today, duplicating yesterday's nervous price range and closing unchanged to ⅜-cent lower.

After dipping to the Thursday lows of 69⅜, May and July contracts hit the same highs at 70 cents, their best level in almost two weeks, but then backed away again. September contracts were subjected to some switching of hedges and was a little weaker than the nearer deliveries. May closed at 69⅝@69½, and July at 69½@69⅝.

The narrow, dull market resulted largely from lack of speculative interest, although there were no new trade developments of consequence. Removal of hedges on wheat sales to mills or to the export subsidy agency attracted offsetting transactions from commission houses and millers who hedged in wheat pending flour business. Rumors of Government activity in connection with wheat and flour exports helped to support prices at times.

Other markets also were unsettled. Corn closed ⅝ lower to ¼ higher; May, 52¼@52⅜; July, 53½. Oats, unchanged. Rye, ¼ to ⅜ higher. Lard, 2 to 8 up.

Selling at Close Shades Advance In Cotton Prices

New York, Jan. 20 (AP).—The cotton market again gave negative response to reports of a considerable expansion in demand for cotton textiles. Prices on the New York Cotton Exchange had a maximum rise of 4 to 8 points, but a part of the gain was surrendered under some increase in selling at the close.

Most of the trading was in the March, May and July positions. New crop contracts were neglected because of uncertainties in the Government's plans for meeting existing problems of oversupply.

Worth Street estimates placed the week's business in unfinished fabrics at around 40,000,000 yards, or well above current production. Prices were generally strong, and either up ⅛-cent a yard or withdrawn.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil lost 2 to 4 points today, but aggressive liquidation which has characterized recent sessions was again absent and pressure came mostly through hedging and realizing. Power, Store and Rail Equipment Shares Firm German Marks Break, Berlin Market Rises Treasury Bonds Continue Advance

New York, Jan. 20.—After widely conflicting group movements, the stock list as a whole ended about where it started today. Except for some good buying in the power division and fair demand for retail store and carrier equipment issues, trading interest was at a low ebb. Bonds showed no more decisive price tendencies than stocks.

While the performance of security markets was negative, financial quarters found plenty to gossip about in the day's news, including the announcement that Dr. Hjalmar Schacht had been superseded in the Reischsbank. Marks broke and the Berlin stock market rose, rather sharply in each case, German exchange recovering most of its losses later, however.

Opinion differed as to the reason for the change. On the one hand some felt that Dr. Schacht's removal indicated he was at variance with the German government over his moderate and conservative policies. But others felt that his retention in the Nazi ministry was a recognition of Germany's dependence on his financial skill, more particularly in handling the highly involved financial mechanism of the nation. The Berlin stock market's spurt, of course, reflected speculation on the part of those who are always suspecting inflation. In general, however, the feelings in Wall Street is that some change in the Reich's fiscal policy, whether radical or otherwise, is impending.

Demand for utilities, which has been in evidence for several days, reflected, and could be accounted for partly by, approval of traders of the action of the Oklahoma State Senate in asking Congress to stop work on the $54,000,000 Red River Dam project but mostly to the labors of underwriters who are preparing the ground for the forthcoming $105,000,000 of North American financing. More than 100 investment houses and agents are being mobilized to market the issue.

Utilities Active

Commonwealth Edison, Columbia Gas & Electric, Consolidated Edison, United Corporation, Commonwealth & Southern, American Water Works, United Gas Improvement and Engineers Public Service all were included in the 15 most active stocks.

Buying of the retail stores shares accompanied reports of great activity in Worth street and estimates that retail stocks have been reduced drastically in advance of spring buying.

Coppers returned to the weak side after having firmed Thursday on announcements of further reductions in production of the red metal, here and abroad. Anaconda, one of the most active issues in the division, was off three-quarters of a point, which was about the average of the decline for the seven leading representatives of the copper industry listed on the big board.

Steel shares edged lower and brokers said that some traders usually interested are on the side lines until after the Bethlehem and possibly the United States Steel Corporation meetings. In addition, news from the steel-making centers seems to indicate a small recession in the output rate next week because of a slowing down in volume of rollings for the automotive industry. Ward's, however, reported that there has been no change in the generally favorable conditions and outlook of the motor car makers.

Am. Ag. Chem. Hits Low

American Agricultural Chemical equaled its low for the year with the loss of more than a point. The stock has been weak ever since issuance of its report for the first half of its fiscal year, ended December 31, showing net loss of about $285,000. Operations of the company are much more profitable in the last half, which ends June 30. American Telephone continued its upward surge, adding more than a point for a new high. Loft, on a block of 2,000 shares, equaled its 1939 high. It closed at 11. International Telephone marched with Gen. Franco although the company's Spanish subsidiary has been cut out of reports of the parent company and there is no indication how much damage the war has caused to facilities.

There was a dribble of new buying in the building group without causing much change to prices. Tri-Continental Corporation, in a survey of construction prospects, estimates volume for 1939 will be at least 15 per cent ahead of 1938.

German Bonds Weak

Save for a sharp relapse in German loans, the listed bond market continued on its dull and even course today. German issues dropped 1 to 2½ points on the replacement of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht as president of the Reichsbank by Dr. Walther Funk. The two German government bonds, on which partial interest is being paid, fell 1 and 1⅜ points, respectively, while other issues, which are in complete default, dropped more heavily in most instances.

Best grade investment issues attracted most attention, other than the German group. United States Treasury securities continued their slow advance with gains of 1-32 to 6-32 point, and a scattering of fresh highs resulted. Guaranteed bonds of the farm and home corporations were similarly firm. High grade utility, railroad and industrial bonds held to their high levels.

Among speculative rails and the main trend was favorable, although some recessions also were noted. Medium-priced interest paying bonds were in fair demand. B. & O. bonds did well on the progress of that road toward interest adjustments. Holding company bonds and industrial convertibles were uncertain. Local tractions remained dull, while communications bonds advanced. Merchandising company issues did well, in some instances.

Foreign dollar bonds, other than German issues, held to former figures. Brazilians were favorites among the Latin-American default bonds. Czech bonds reflected a little buying, while Italians also advanced, but the Japanese group drifted lower. Highest grade foreigns were well maintained.

Memphis Utility Turns Down City Offer for System

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 20 (AP).—Memphis Power & Light Co., today rejected, at least for the present, the city's offer of $18,127,000 for the company's electric and gas systems. The utility flatly rejected a $13,500,000 offer for the electric facilities provided it would cut its gas rates.

The action followed the city's refusal to grant the company an additional week to consider the question. The city had set noon today as a deadline.

A letter signed by W. J. O'Brien, president of M. P. & L., advised the city light and water board that the $18,127,000 proposal would be submitted to security holders without recommendation. Tom Allen, light and water board chairman, immediately announced that the city would push construction on its partly completed system that now competes with M. P. & L. in some areas.

Allen said that a $349,700 contract for overhead distribution lines would soon be awarded and that a $93,400 contract for underground ducts would be signed simultaneously.

Home Building to Lead Construction This Year

New York, Jan. 20.—The construction industry may expect an increase of at least 15 per cent in total contracts during 1939, according to a study just completed by Tri-Continental Corporation which indicates that the largest gains will take place in the residential field, with publicly-sponsored slum clearance and rental housing projects in the lead.

While aggregate non-residential awards may do only about as well as the construction industry as a whole, the report states, "It is quite possible that industrial and commercial building awards will show better than average gains."

Cottonseed Oil to Play Big Role in South

New Uses Develop New Process to Add 45,000,000 Lbs. a Year

New York, Jan. 20.—An increase of 45,000,000 pounds in the South's annual production of cottonseed oil is made possible by the development of new automatically controlled processing equipment in the laboratories of the engineering experiment station of the University of Tennessee in co-operation with the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Engineering Foundation of New York, announced today.

The research, aided by grants by the foundation, is regarded as the first of a series of achievements which will enable cottonseed, the uses of which are daily multiplying, "to function to greater advantage in the cotton economy of the South." The university engineers see a possibility of expanding the value of cottonseed until it, rather than staple cotton, may become the principal product of the cotton plant.

For Soybeans and Peanuts

Large savings are promised for other industries. The new methods for increasing the yield of oil from cottonseed can, it is pointed out, be applied to the Middle West's growing soybean industry and to other oil-seed crops such as peanuts and flaxseed.

The new developments consist of a steam pressure oil seeds cooker employing high temperatures under steam pressure for processing cottonseed and similar oleaginous materials; a seed conditioner or humidifier for delinted seed of abnormal dryness, and a hydraulic plate press with enlarged drainage capacity. In tests made over a period of two years, costs of power and fuel for the production of cottonseed oil were reduced by 25 per cent. In addition, there were important savings on the wear and tear of press cloths, made of human hair, in which the cottonseed is wrapped while in the press.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

The Week-end Windup:

F. C. SCHLEMMER, construction superintendent at TVA Chicamauga Dam, has posted an order notifying all employes that if they drive an automobile while drunk they're out of work around his way . . . The embattled FCC's budget hearing is scheduled for Monday, and no flurry is expected from it. It will be finished in half a day, the information goes.

The FCC wants about $300,000 more than it had last year, and is emphasizing the need of increased personnel. The shortage of employes there is said to be acute, accounting for more than 1,000 hours of overtime last year—which is considerable in a small outfit. They need stenographers, secretaries and some assistant engineers.

OVER in the Agriculture Department, some members of the Chorus have joked about hiring a hall and offering "A Nightmare After the Opera" every night in the week. The realities almost belie the joke; the offering has been so popular here as to make the show seem a little better than worthy of a local hall or the road. It's too bad the Chorus members have to work by day.

The credit for the conception must go entirely to Prof. Robert Frederick Freund, the Chorus director. The idea stayed a long while in his musical head, whirled around more and more, and finally came to life on the department's stage in a hit that has consistently laid them in the aisles and kept the S. R. O. sign dusted off. That the idea was a success is, of course, attributable entirely to the amateur talent in the big department—and to the humor of scholarly scientists who knew how to top their sedate days with a ton of merriment.

CIVIL Service Commissioner Lucille Foster McMillin will place a wreath on the grave of Helen Hamilton Gardner, first woman Civil Service Commissioner, in Arlington Cemetery at 11:30 a. m. today. The occasion is the eighty-sixth anniversary of Commissioner Gardner's birth and the concluding day of National Civil Service Week. Mrs. Gardner was commissioner from 1920 to 1925 under appointment of President Wilson. She was a first-flight leader in women's organization work and is credited with being one of those who persuaded President Wilson to throw his shoulder behind the passage of the woman suffrage amendment.

The last event of National Civil Service Week occurs tonight at the Kennedy-Warren Hotel, when the American Federation of Government Employes hold a dance in honor of the three Civil Service commissioners and Miss Ellen Maki, "Miss Civil Service."

F. Cowles Strickland, director, Washington Civic Theater, writes: "At last Washington will see a play about Washington, by a Washingtonian and acted by Washingtonians. Most of the scenes will be easily recognized as they are laid in various offices of departments and the Capitol. The play is "Washington Merry-Go-Round," by Leon Pearson. Most of the civic actors are Government employes.

AN assistant cook is wanted at St. Elizabeths Hospital, one who has had two years of cook experience which must have included the supervision of other kitchen help. Applicants must be 21 years old; the top limit is 48. There will be physical requirements. This is through the Civil Service Commission and it brings up the question of what kind of examinations they give for such a job. Obviously, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, so it is possible the examiners may get some first-rate meals, when the cooks, hoping for a job, are giving their all.

NOTES: Congressional people from Indiana will be guests tonight of their State's society at a dance in 2400 Sixteenth street northwest. Preceding the dance, the delegation will be tendered a dinner by Douglas Whitlock, the society president . . . The National League of Women Voters has selected New York City for its next biennial convention, to be held the last week in April, 1940, a long way off. It will be the first time the 20-year-old league has met in New York . . . The next performance of the Union Playhouse, sponsored by the Agriculture Branch of the N. F. F. E., will be held Wednesday night and will feature several Navy films titled: "Jack Wins His Wings," "Navy Wings of Gold," "Sky Fleet of the Navy," and "Gateway to the Pacific."

Bob Burns Says—

I see some explorers have found rats three feet long in Dutch New Guinea and they're bringin' some of 'em back alive to this country. They claim they're the biggest ever discovered. But, shucks—we got some rats here over 6 feet long that the G-men is settin' their traps for . . . an' our common household variety of rat is big enough to wrestle the family cat.

My Uncle Toot used to own a rat farm out in Arkansaw. At least that's what he called it. He had so many rats on it, he used to say, he ran the farm just for them. But talk about your Pied Piper of Hamlin! One day my uncle threw a barn dance an' had one of them jitterbug jazz bands come to play. At the first tune, them rats came racin' out of every nook an' cranny by the hundreds an' dived into the creek and drowned themselves. So, don't you go tryin' to tell me this here modern music ain't good for somethin'!

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The gamut of emotions is run at the bridge table—fear, anger, remorse, joy, despair, hate, pity and contempt—aping the feelings we endure in the struggles of everyday life.

While the game is in progress the player is taken out of himself and thrown into a new world on his own resources, very much like the one he lives in except that he is given a fresh start, and in this cardboard world he may meet success where it was denied him in real life.

Thus it is not surprising that a few short hours at the card table will reveal what would otherwise require years of knowing to learn.

A Critical Situation

It took courage and nerve to finesse the strategical trump lead the deciding factor in the victory or defeat of today's hand, but Dr. Alfred Sze, the Chinese Ambassador to the United States, was equal to it.

The game reported by Frank B. Lord, Washington bridge expert, took place at the Metropolitan Club in Washington. Dr. Sze's partner was Swagar Sherley, former Congressman from Kentucky, and one of the leaders of the House of Representatives during the Wilson regime.

Dr. Sze and his partner, using the Vanderbilt Club convention, arrived at six clubs doubled. Unfortunately Dr. Sze, who became declarer by virtue of his opening club bid, was void in trumps, and when his adversary, thinking to throw him off the track, daringly led the suit he was hard put to it to judge the lead correctly.

Not Over Yet

This was not all of his troubles. There were two aces also against him, both of which could win and one of which was taken on the opening lead, but in spite of the seemingly insurmountable odds, Dr. Sze made his contract. This is how he did it:

West opened the ace of Diamonds and then shifted to the five of clubs. Dr. Sze studied the situation for a few moments, then played the club jack, which held, and followed with the club ace and king, discarding three hearts from his hand as he drew the outstanding trumps. He took the ace of spades, ruffed a low spade in dummy and returned to his hand with the king of diamonds. He ruffed a third round of spades, and the suit was established. He entered his hand once more with the diamond queen and led out a spade, discarding dummy's losing heart. North's trumps took care of the balance of the tricks, and Dr. Sze scored six clubs, losing one diamond.

Bedtime Story

Reddy's Lost Appetite

By Thornton W. Burgess.

They add up to a vast amount.
—Reddy Fox.

No one knows better than Reddy Fox the importance of little things. It is because of his attention to little things that he has been so successful. You see, among the people of the Green Meadows and Green Forest, success is measured by the ability to just live. Anyone who can overcome the ever-present dangers and remain alive is a success. Of course, the older one is, the greater success he is.

The pinch of hunger and the scarcity of food in their own neighborhood had driven Reddy and Mrs. Reddy to seek another locality where hunting would be better. This they finally found in a neighborhood where the last of the Foxes who had once lived there had been trapped, but of this they know nothing.

Their presence in that neighborhood was undiscovered until after the first light fall of snow following their arrival. They had to hunt, for they had to eat, and they couldn't move about without leaving footprints in the snow. Reddy said nothing about the matter to Mrs. Reddy, but those footprints worried him. It didn't make him feet any easier when, having hunted in a great circle, so as to come back to his tracks made early in the morning, he discovered other footprints. They were of a Man and led in the same direction as his own. That Man was following Reddy's trail.

Were those the footprints of a hunter with a terrible gun? Reddy didn't know. He wanted to know. He would do a little following himself. So Reddy trotted along the trail left by the trapper who had been following his trail. Of course, Reddy didn't know the Man was a trapper, but suspected that he might be a hunter with a terrible gun. So at last he came to where the trails parted. The footprints of the Man turned off. Reddy followed them and saw that they led toward a certain farmhouse. That night he warned Mrs. Reddy that their presence in the neighborhood had been discovered. He suspected that the next day he would be hunted with Dogs.

They were not, and he saw no more footprints to worry him. After a few days he almost forgot the matter. Then came a bad storm, followed by bitter cold. A crust formed, a hard crust that would make no footprints. They could travel freely without fear of leaving a trail that any but a Dog could follow; and so far there had been no Dogs.

Reddy was following a little stream now frozen over. Just ahead of him a log crossed the brook. At the end of this log some sticks stood in the crusted snow in such a way that they made a little fence with an opening, a narrow opening, between them and the end of the log. Under the log a lot of trash had been piled. For anyone smaller than himself that narrow opening between the end of the log and the sticks standing in the snow made a natural passage.

Reddy went around that little fence and stopped abruptly. Facing him, his back arched, his eyes red, hissing angrily, was a Mink. He was making a brave display of courage, for he was almost helpless. One foot was held fast in the cruel jaws of a steel trap which had been cunningly hidden in that opening between the end of the log and the sticks in the snow.

Now, Reddy had been very, very hungry. A Mink which he had fairly caught, while not what he would choose for meat, would have been most acceptable. He could kill this fellow without trouble, but he found that he had suddenly lost his appetite. Yes, sir; Reddy had lost his appetite. If there were traps for Mink, there might be traps for Fox. He must find and warn Mrs. Reddy.

Development of Section 3 of Rock Creek Park in Montgomery County will be expedited by gifts totaling $100,000, it was announced yesterday by Curtis Walker, appraiser and land purchasing officer of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Walker said he had been notified the park commission's payment of $90,000 to the Straight Improvement Co., for 200 acres of park land is being returned to the commission as a gift from Mrs. L. K. Elmhirst, owner of considerable property adjacent to the parkway.

Other gifts reported by Walker included $2,750 from Dr. E. A. Merritt, of Chevy Chase; $2,400 from Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic Society, and $4,500 from George E. Hamilton, of Bethesda.

Dr. Merritt's gift represented a refund of the price previously paid him for the land and Dr. Grosvenor's gift was asubstantial portion of the sum paid him for a larger tract which he sold for less then he paid for the land. All gifts were voluntary and were not conditional on previous contracts, Walker said.

Commenting on the gift of Mrs. Elmhirst, Walker said it was especially appreciated at this time because the commission has been handicapped by lack of funds for the purchase of land and development of the third section of Rock Creek Park extending from Connecticut avenue near Kensington through Garrett Park and across the Rockville pike. One of the first developments in the new area will be construction of a park road through the unit.

"The new road," Walker said, "will enable motorists to drive from this point in Montgomery County to Mount Vernon without encountering city traffic, although funds for its completion are still insufficient because a number of costly bridges are required."

Announcement also was made that the United States Navy has consented to development of that portion of the 18 acres along the Rockville pike recently obtained as the site for a new naval hospital that lie within the proposed park area, in harmony with the park section.

The new section of the park contains 330 acres and when added to sections 1 and 2, it will give Montgomery County 685 acres in the extension of Rock Creek Park from Washington.

Rockville.—Counter placards and coin receptacles will be placed in all stores, banks and business establishments in Montgomery County today inaugurating the "Mile of Dimes Campaign" being conducted in connection with the local Birthday Ball for the President on January 30 at the Silver Spring Armory.

Broome, superintendent of schools, has asked all county school principals and teachers to co-operate in observing Friday as official "Mile of Dimes Day" in the county. Students will be urged to make contributions at school that day as a special aid to the fight against infantile paralysis.

Interest in this year's county birthday ball has been greatly increased by the announcement that one-half of the proceeds will be turned over to the American Legion orthopedic clinic for disbursement within the county.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.

Just get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a reliable "WOMAN'S" tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and those disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life.

Pinkham's is WELL WORTH trying.
